FROM SLAVE TO FINANCIER

That is the Story of Isaiah Montgomery, Negro, Who Now Talks Dollars in Six Figures

From slave to financier, with a big dream for the betterment of his race which he has come to New York to fulfill, is the epitome of the life of an aged negro, who arrived in New York recently, says the New York Sun. He is Isaiah T. Montgomery, founder of Mound Bayou, Miss., a town where there are only negroes, and which is itself in a large measure the fulfilment of his dream for the improvement of his kind, for, hammering away at the negro problem from a different point of view, Mr. Montgomery has attained among his own people an eminence that is hardly second, both in importance and interest, to that of Booker T. Washington.

It is a long gap from slave pickaninny, playing in the sands of the Mississippi delta, to the life of a man who is a member of the board of directors of a plantations of Joseph E. Davis, brother of "Jeff" Davis, and became a slave in his second year. Up to the time he was nine years old he was under the wing of his father, who held a position as general superintendent of the Davis plantation. His father was marked for his education and ability, having picked up his education from a former young master in Virginia, who was of his own age and imparted to him all he learned in his own schooling.

The father in turn passed along his knowledge to his son Isaiah, and at nine years of age he was taken into Mr. Davis' office and set to work filing papers and gradually came to perform clerical work of a responsible nature. He had the advantage of Mr. Davis' scholarship and attributes his own grasp of English to this education.

"Then came the war," Mr. Montgomery said. "The family and most of the negroes fled inland, but the news came that Admiral Porter had run the batteries at Vicksburg. My father and brother and I stayed, and I joined the federals as cabin boy with the admiral. This is how my emancipation came before that time. It was a war, too, that brought Mr. Montgomery's first financial experience. He and the negroes were placed in charge of the plantations by Mr. Davis under an agreement that six per cent interest was to be paid to his family on an investment of $300,000. This was when Mr. Montgomery began to learn how to handle money. For thirteen years he continued in the cotton planting business on the Davis estate, and then went to the Yazoo-Mississippi delta, where he was here he became interested in land dealing, and also got his dream of establishing a community for the betterment of his own people. He had influential white interests behind him, and a wild place on the great Yazoo-Mississippi delta was selected as the site for the colony.

This was in 1888, and since that time it has grown to a town of a thousand persons, and a surrounding community of two thousand more, with a bank capitalised at $250,000 and having resources of four times that, a newspaper, several big business concerns and mills, and a post-office that last year issued money orders amounting to $123,700. Every one in the town is a negro, and Mr. Montgomery has been mayor and still is the leading citizen, being the financial head of most of the big business institutions there.

"But the matter of financing our affairs," he said, "has been a continual handicap from the beginning, entailing heavy responsibilities, encumbrances and interest payments, to provide for which I deduct very greatly from our ability properly to consider and foster essential public enterprise and development. My purpose in coming to New York is to raise a great fund that will enable the thrifty members of my community to get loans of 4 or 4 1/2 per cent, as the most effective means of progress.

Security for this fund is to be found, explained in the land values, both developed and undeveloped, and also in bonds on a great cottonseed oil mill company, capitalised at $100,000, of which he is president.

VALUABLE DIAMOND PIN OF MRS. EDDY'S GOES TO MRS. STETSON

New York, June 6 - Interest in the administration of the large estate of Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, in view of the recent death of General Henry M. Baker, whom her will appointed sole executor without surety, led to the discovery that a valuable diamond crown pin, valued at $100,000, had been dropped from the roll of the Christian Science church.

Interpretation of this bequest to signify expression of love and approval by Mrs. Eddy of Mrs. Stetson were met by declarations of representatives of the Christian Science church, who said that Mrs. Eddy had not worn the pin for six years prior to her death, December 4, 1910, and that the gift to Mrs. Stetson was merely a restoration. They said Mrs. Stetson gave the pin to Mrs. Eddy in 1901.

Mrs. Stetson, in confirming the report of the delivery of the valuable jewel to her by General Baker, said: "This is a diamond crown pin." The points of the crown are four, set each with a large diamond, and the centre point bearing three of similar size together. On the band of the crown are ten diamonds of lower size. This miniature portrait of Mrs. Eddy is, however, one of my dearest possessions," she continued, and opened the case in which lay the picture set with forty diamonds about its oval frame. "Mrs. Eddy gave me that year ago and the exact duplicate of it she bequeathed in her will to General Baker."
