BRILLIANT SERVICE
OF MAJOR-GENERAL
OTTER IN MILITIA

Has Seen Half Century Under the Flag—Soon to Retire as Inspector-General

(Ottawa Citizen)

With the retirement of Major-General W. D. Otter from the post of inspector-general of the Canadian militia, on December 1, which was announced yesterday, one of the best known and most distinguished officers who has ever done duty in this country will pass to the non-effective list. On the day he retires, Gen. Otter will have completed a year more than half a century of service in the militia. He went through the mill as a private in the Queen's Own as far back as 1861, and climbing the military ladder step by step until he reached the position of inspector-general in the summer of his present high rank. He first saw service in the Fenian Raid of '69, when he took part in the night attack on the Fenian camp at Carleton Place. Four years later he was in the field again during the second raid. Honors came to him in the shape of the general service medal with two clasps.

In Northwest rebellion broke out in the Northwest in 1885, he commanded the Battleford column, participating in the relief of Battleford and the subsequent action at Cut Knife Hill. Later came the operations against Big Bear's band in the summer of the same year. For his services, he was mentioned in despatches and received the medal with clasps.

It was for the part he played during the South African war, however, when he commanded the first Canadian Contingent, that he will be best remembered. The experience which the government was trying to gain was a novel one in the annals of British war traditions. Never before had sent to fight alongside of regular troops, and there were many, not pessimists, either, who considered that the innovative and, however, with the thought that the volunteer battalion would probably be left on the line of communications, the fighting being left to the more seasoned regulars.

A Fine Leader

How they under-rated the capabilities of the regiment's commanding officer, and of the military leader, during and soldierly qualities of the men he led, is an old story. The contingent was not long in South Africa before the senior British officer on the western field of operation became aware of the fact that Colonel Otter was a mighty fine regimental leader, and his command a very handy body of men to have by in case of emergency. When the full campaign following the black disaster of Magersfontein, the Canadians, then a Belmont north of the Orange River, were being prepared by arduous drill and practice in skirmishing for the time when they should

Wall Street Notes.

New York, Sept. 3.—Americans in London firm, 14 to 12 up.

Bank statement poor, loss in reserves heavy, and banks now hold actual reserves of 4 1/2 billions, very small for this season of the year.

American loan, earned on its common stock in last year, against 7.30 percent.

Erie's preliminary statement for year shows surplus of 2 1/4 millions, a decrease of 1 1/4 millions from previous year.

Government cotton report on condition of August 23, out at noon today.

Dun's and Bradstreet's both say business and industrial activity continue to expand with assurance that crops are practically secure.

The outlook for money is for higher rates. Our balances in London are down to a close working basis, over loans to Germany, have largely been repaid, and if New York needs foreign aid, it will be compelled to bid against the world.

There is no question that we have entered a period of worldwide active money.

President Farrell, of the U. S. Steel, says prospects are best in years.

A large number of prominent people in financial circles return to this country this week, and more activity in the market is expected.

Sentiment is divided. There is a fairly good tone to the market, but investors are fighting shy of the railroad list. Steel, U. S. Steel, and Erie are overvalued. Steel, U. S. Steel, and Erie are overvalued. Steel, U. S. Steel, and Erie are overvalued.

Arnold Bennett Has Good Leaf After His American Travels

SECRET WELL GUARDED

Speculation as to Author of The Great Analysis Has Been Rife in London—Late Professor Koch Worshipped as a God in Japan

(Times' Special Correspondence)

London, Aug. 20.—It looks as if Arnold Bennett's admission might have to wait a while for the last volume of the trilogy that began with "Clayhanger" and "Hilda Lessways." Evidently the visit which Bennett paid to America recently, and which resulted in the book which is to be called "Your United States," on the other side of the Atlantic and "The United States" on this, was too much for him, for his health has been considerably below par ever since he got back. Of late he has suffered tortures with abscesses in his ears, and now, having got the American book off his hands and arranged for the production of no less than three of his plays in the United States, he is going to wait until he feels better.

As a result he has bought a yacht and is going off on a cruise in her next week. Bennett's immediate objective, however, is to visit the United States, and to see the country which he has just written about. He is going to visit the United States, and to see the country which he has just written about.

LITTLE FABLES OF THE RISING YOUNG MAN

There were once two rising young men interested in getting along in the world. Both were well aware that there is no aeroplane line running from the valley up to the heights of success, and that the only way to get to the top is to climb step by step up the long, dusty road. They were both determined to climb, and willing to bear the hardships of the journey. Both were eager to reach the top, but still patient and persistent enough to take it in slow, steady stages with, perhaps, a forced march here and there when the occasion seemed proper.

So far they were alike. But when it came to a question of ascending the heights, the resemblance ceased. One of the young men looked ahead along the road he was taking. The other kept his eyes on the ground at his feet and followed them. The other simply walked—without worrying much as to where the road was going to lead him. He was confident that every road must lead some place.

One mapped out his journey and tried his utmost to keep on the path. The other simply kept on a path—any path—so long as it was a path. He was not sure that it was a path, but he was sure that it was a path.

It has been said that "a rolling stone gathers no moss." And it has also been said that "a stationary house is a house of death." Both of which, no doubt, are true. But there is another interesting fact about the movement of the stone and the house. The stone that rolls gathers moss, but the house that is stationary gathers death.

So long as the stone simply existed it was harmless. Immediately it was set in motion, it became a menace. And so it was with these two rising young men. One was a stone, and the other was a house. One was a stone, and the other was a house.
