SQUIRE PUGSLEY AS A K. C. B.

On Saturday last, a well-known, progressive, and address the electors of Kings County at Hanford on the political question of the day. He wore a serious and somewhat somber, and to the casual observer he looked like a city lawyer, whose pockets were well lined with the money obtained for his services from wealthy clients. His clothing, too, seemed to have an unmistakable city air, as if made by some fashionable tailor, but this was only the outward seeming. Those who looked deeper than the surface of things, could readily discern that the speaker was not a city man at all. Whatever his outward trappings may have appeared, his moral nature was clothed in something entirely different. Before his searching glance his fashionable attire melted away, and beneath it could be seen that he was dressed in a rags and tatters, without a collar, a waistcoat and pants, and that the latter were tacked into his boots, which were of worn-out and shabby material.

Mr. William Pugsley showed a true spirit of the demagogue in his speech Saturday. Among other things, referring to Mr. Lawrence's letter, he said: "I shall not go into the details of his letter, but merely say that it is a very peculiar statement when he complains that the grand jury of the Dominion is composed of men who are not loyal to the Dominion. The grand jury of the Dominion is composed of men who are not loyal to the Dominion. The grand jury of the Dominion is composed of men who are not loyal to the Dominion."

Mr. Pugsley would think that the Dominion is a very peculiar country. He would be interested to know how many similar cases exist in the United Kingdom.
