

SET ADRIFF IN NIAGARA.

Flange of the Burning Steamer Caroline Over the Great Cataract.

In the year 1837 the province of upper Canada was ablaze with internal and external strife. Many strong men had left their homes to do battle, and the timid men bera of their households were unnerved by the uncertainties of war and the local dangers with which they were personally surrounded. Then it was that false rumors flew thick and fast, to be gobbled up and believed by those who had no means of ascertaining the truth. Those who have not made a careful study of the incidents of 1837-38 will find it hard to conceive the excitement which at that time prevailed, but they will readily recognize how foolish was the patriot movement in its effort to change the dominion destiny. The patriots had gathered on Navy Island, just above the falls, and there from their headquarters they issued proclamations which caused the government to recognize the necessity of prompt action. Governor Sir Francis Bond Head issued a call for troops, and in response thereto about 2,500 men gathered on the banks of the Niagara River, near Chippewa Creek, on the Canadian mainland, opposite Navy Island. It was at this time that the steamer Caroline appeared on the scene. She was built at Charleston, S. C., in 1822, of live oak. Her capacity was forty-five tons. She had been sold as a smuggler, and was purchased and pressed into service between Schlosser and Navy Island. It was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of Dec. 29, 1837, that the Caroline moored at Schlosser dock, for the night. The small tavern on the dock, kept by a Mr. Fields, was crowded, for Schlosser was then a prominent place, it being the upper end of the portage between Lake Ontario and the Niagara River. A number of men took to the boat, and in all report says, thirty-three men slept there on the fatal night. It was about 8 o'clock that an unarmed watch was placed on the deck. There was no thought of danger.

Colonel McNab concluded that this method of supply of the patriots must be cut off, and he therefore decided on an expedition to send the Caroline to destruction. Captain Drew was put in command of the expedition. In all seven boats were loaded. One was commanded by Captain Drew, another by Shepard McCormack, the third by Christopher Beer, the fourth by John Gordon, the fifth by John Emesty, and the sixth by Thomas Hector, and the seventh by John Battersby. The members of the expedition proceeded up the river a short distance before crossing. After passing midstream they were given orders to destroy the Caroline wherever she was found. Two of the boats lost their way—one grounding on Buckhorn Island, while the other pulled along the shore of Navy Island, and was fired at from shore to shore, but fortunately none of the men in it was hit. The other five boats kept together and pulled on the wharf at Schlosser, where the Caroline was moored. As they approached the sentry board called out, "Who comes there?" In accordance with Drew's orders no answer was given. The sentry repeated the challenge, and, there being no response, he fired, at the boats, it is said, and then ran ashore. The noise of the shots aroused the people on shore and those on the steamer. There was a brief battle, and Amos Duffree fell dead on the wharf, a bullet piercing his skull.

At first it was thought that he was one of the attacking party, but the late J. M. Blutterby fully identified him as a loyal Yankee. The invaders secured control of the Caroline very easily, and, cutting her loose, they towed her out into the river. Members of the attacking crew boarded her and made sure no human beings were left aboard. Then she was set on fire, and by the time the middle of the stream was reached she was all a blaze. The flames lit up the wild river from shore to shore and made a never to be forgotten scene. As she started down the current the thrilling cry ran around on both shores that there were living souls on board, and as the vessel wrapt in vivid flames, which disclosed her doom as they shone brightly on the water, was hurried down the rapids to the cataract, a number caught in fancy the wails of dying human beings hopelessly perishing by the double horror of a fate which nothing could avert, and watched with agonizing attention the flaming mass until it was hurried over the falls to be crushed in everlasting darkness and unfathomable water below.

When the news of Caroline "massacre" spread there were wild mutterings of war. The United States government demanded redress for the destruction of property and assassination of citizens of the United States and the soil of New York at Schlosser. The men known to have taken part in the expedition were indicted by the New York courts and they were treated as heroes in Canada. Public sentiment was worked up to a high pitch and a war between Great Britain and the United States appeared imminent.

In November, 1840, Alexander McLeod came from Canada to New York and boasted that he was the slayer of Duffree. He was at once arrested and the indignation of the English was greatly increased. His release was demanded and the situation was decidedly embarrassing. He was finally brought up for trial, however, in October, 1841, when it was clearly shown that he was a mere braggart, and had not even been present when Duffree was killed. His acquittal happily ended the case and smoothed the case for the negotiation of the Ashburton treaty, which opened at Washington soon afterward, and settled all questions between England and the United States.—Philadelphia Record.

GOOD DOG STORIES.

Incidents from Exchanges Showing High Powers of Reasoning.

A young man had for some years owned a dog, which was his constant companion. He married, and moved with his wife and dog into a house on the opposite side of the street from his father's house, his old home. The dog was not happy, for attentions which had once been his own were now given to the young wife. His master tried to reconcile him to the altered state of things, and the bride tried to win his affections; but he constantly showed his displeasure and misery. One day the master came home and sat down, putting his arm about his wife. Jack was lying by the fire, and he at once rose, approaching the two, and made the usual exhibition of his disapproval. "Why, Jack!" said his master, "this is all right. She is a good girl," and as he spoke he patted his wife's arm. Jack looked up at him, turned away and left the room. In a moment they heard a noise, and, going into the hall, they found him dragging his bed down stairs. He reached the front door and whined to be let out. The door was opened and he dragged the bed down the steps, and across the street to his old home, where he scratched for admittance. Since then he has never returned to his master and his refused all overtures toward reconciliation.

A resident of Fimlico writes that he took charge of a black-and-tan terrier belonging to a friend who was to leave the neighborhood. It was reported to me that Jimmie always left the house after breakfast. At first some alarm was felt that he would stray but as he invariably returned after an hour's stroll, I took him to be one of those "vagrant" animals who cannot live without a prowling in the streets, and I felt no anxiety. But I ascertained that, whenever he went away, he carried off a bone or something edible with him. I watched him one or two mornings, and saw him squeeze through the area railings, on each occasion carrying a big bone, which he had great difficulty in steering through the iron bars. Being curious about the destination of the food I made up my mind to follow him. I tracked him to an empty house, next to that in which his former owner had lived. In a cellar in the area there lived a half-starved, ownerless terrier, who, I suppose, had once been a friend of Jimmie's, and whom my dog in his days of prosperity never forgot. Regularly the good little fellow trotted off to the empty cellar, and divided his morning's meal with his poor friend.—London Spectator.

Angus, Albert, a baker doing business in New Orleans, owns an intelligent dog, Fifiue, that keeps his master's shop for him. Albert has a little bake-room behind the shop, and, as he always gives his personal attention to the oven, Fifiue proves invaluable in waiting upon customers. The dog carries strapped about his neck a little bank whose slot is arranged to receive more or less than a nickel. The customer may help himself to a loaf from the counter, but would betide one who tries to depart without depositing the requisite nickel in Fifiue's bank. If more than one loaf is taken an equal number of deposits must be made in the bank, or Fifiue will know the reason why. She knows very well how to use her teeth in case of necessity, though she is usually as mild as a lamb, and quite a favorite with her customers, but, if her master should be needed, she has only to pull the bell-rope which communicates with the bake-room and he is on the spot.—New Orleans Correspondence, Philadelphia Times.

Dr. John Clark Redpath, the historian, living at Greenacres, has a rather remarkable dog, known all over Putnam county as Duke. He seems to have absorbed some of the rare intelligence of his noted master. One day Duke was sent to the butcher shop for a basket of meat. He secured it and started home. On the way home he met a fellow canine that was determined to have some of that meat. After worrying with the fellow for awhile, Duke decided that more heroic measures were necessary, and jumping upon a stone fence near by, he deposited the basket out of harm's way, leaped to the ground, and wallowed the lie out of his enemy. When the latter went howling away, Duke secured the basket of meat and trotted homeward. He goes to his post to deliver the meat, and by placing his fore feet on the delivery window and barking. This act he performs several times a day, never loses a letter, and never forgets what time to go. He almost invariably eats at his master's side. In fact, the bites of meat alternate between his mouth and Dr. Redpath's. He is a collie, and can do a score of odd tricks.—Indianapolis Sun.

Spelling no Good

Professor Earle, the eminent philologist, has caused no small stir in England by a proposal to omit orthography entirely from education. He maintains that a compulsory standard of spelling is mischievous; and it does not matter how anybody spells, provided that the meaning of the language employed is clear; and that we should all be spelling as we please if it were not for the autocracy of the press.—Boston Herald.

conditions

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is rapid. For this reason we put up a 50c. size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children.

In other conditions gain must be slow, sometimes almost imperceptible, health can't be built up in a day. For this Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment, food rather than medicine, food prepared for tired and weak digestions.
