Music in the Home

ONLY TWO DIVISIONS.

To the average person there are just two kinds of music, the kind he likes and the kind he does not like. There are individuals and organizations working to stimulate interest in British music. Other are advocating the use of more French or Russian or Italian or Spanish or American music. These efforts have their place. The champions of the music of the various nations have a useful mission to perform. But in the long run the quality of the individual composition or the public's fancy for it will determine its use. No music deserves recognition simply because it is the work of a citizen of a certain nation. All the admonition, all the publicity, The average person usually does not like oratorios and huge symphonies. He does not crave marches and about opera. He does not praise the old masters and damn the modern or ultra-modern. The composer's nationality does influence some people's likes and dislikes but generally speaking to the public music is the universal language—the only esperanto. The public divides music into two classes—and just two—what it likes and what it does not like.

MUSICAL BRIEFS.

Even a revolution will not go without singing.

"Sweeping either down or up, especially by the sopranos, is a habit to be avoided by every choir.

Tchaikovsky, the most distinguished representative of modern Russian musical compositions was born on Christmas Day. That event was quite fitting as Christmas and music are inseparable.

Sir George Grove, editor-in-chief of the monumental "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" was by profession a civil engineer. He was knighted by Queen Victoria in 1883.

Saint-Saens began his piano studies at the age of two and a half years and yet some parents to-day think that at six, or seven or eight years is too young.

Describing how participation in music has affected whole communities, a gentleman describes one town where the man who drives you from the station will likely be singing Elgar's "Caractacus" to you the same evening.

Picking the hits in the popular song world is no sure thing. But they usually have a catchy title, a story that rings true and an easy flowing melody that is easily whistled, hummed and sung.

A typical instance of Hapsburg policy was when in 1784 the Czechs had their choral societies suppressed by Joseph II. These choral organizations not only kept alive the people's love of music but their very national life.

"It is a recognized fact" someone asserts, "that people in general sing a foreign language better than their own because, being a foreign language, they take more pains with it." It is hard to see how that can be construed to make an argument against the demand for more singing in English.

REAL TEACHING REQUIRED

In the early days it was only necessary for a girl to take a few lessons from someone who had in turn "studied" a little in town or nearby city, to immediately "get up a class" of beginners in the neighborhood and teach them Home Sweet Home with Variations, and Maiden's Prayer, until, by passing of time, she became known as a "music teacher." Perhaps she had all had part in the national development, but such paths no longer lead to the mountain top. Teaching there must be, and multiplied a hundredfold, but real teaching on the same high plane of equipment and achievement as is required in education in any other subject solid academic preparation in the science of the subject-matter and thorough training in the pedagogy of the art superimposed on a natural talent for and comprehensive training in the art itself.

WHAT MUSIC IN THE HOME MEANS

A well known educator, in discussing the subject of music, especially singing in the home, said:

"We have made music too much of a sacred art. It has been something to be performed, not used. We have associated it with the piano teacher and arduous practice, with the trained soloist and quartet in church, and with the occasional high-priced concert. We listen to music and we sing too little.

"The thing to do is to give song regular and definite place in the home life. Let the little ones imitate our own lullabies and carols. Teach them songs. Turn their games into song. 'Distant not the toy musical instruments, whistles, kazoos, jew's-harps, tiny pianos. When you use canned music, don't merely listen to it, sing with it.

"Revive the old custom of a regular singing period. Try to have it daily, between the dark and the day light. Always have it on Sunday.

"You may be proud if you can help develop a musical artist in your home. It is better if you can encourage a singing heart."

"Music study, that begins with mechanics instead of music, puts the cart before the horse," said a piano teacher, "and the only time it is safe to do that is when you want to go back."

It is said that in no other country is dancing so interwoven with folk music as in Spain. Many Spanish songs are used solely as accompaniments for dancing. One who became enthused with Spanish music said that our ignorance of the music of Spain is pathetic.

A Y.M.C.A. song leader at a military camp says: "The elements in the choice of a good song, include a simple melody with good rhythm, within the compass of an active, repetition of melody, not too many varied phrases, repetition of words, but preferably not starting and ending the chorus with the same expression."
