London, Jan. 27—The opening it was effective. phrases of the seeches of Sir E. QUESTION phrases of the seeches of Sir E. Grey, Foreign Secretary, in the House of Commons and the Marquis of Lansdowne, Minister without portfolio, in the House of Lords yesterday, gave the impression that the British government is not likely to resort to an absolute blockade of Germany.

QUESTION FOR NEUTRALS

"I would say to neutrals that we cannot abandon our rights of interference with enemy trade, and cannot exercise that right without considerable inconvenience to their trade. They must answer the one main question."

Germany.

Foreign Secretary Grey opened his speech in the Commons by saying it was a difficult and complicated subject which the House had under consideration. He had gathered from the debate that there was a real misapperehension concerning the amount of trade passing into Germany and regarding what this government was doing to stop that trade The figures.

Sir Edward said that the Government was doing what the supporters of the blockade policy demanded. "We cannot do more than we are already doing," he said. With regard to wheat the Foreign Sccretary, showed that Foreign Sccretary, showed that was the aim of the allies, and concluded by declaring:

"We shall see this thing through to the end."

The Foreign Secretary emphasized or no demand for cattle at Union Stock Yards to-day. Trade was slow and concluded by declaring:

Questioned as to whether could be overriden, the secretary replied in the affirmative, and instanced

ing with cargoes brought into British courts,
The Contraband committee, which includes two representatives of the Admiralty, he said, had done its work admirably and during the last year cause they led the navy to suppose its work was being undone by another department.

Continuing Sir Edward said:
"The task of the Foreign Office is burdensome one. It must retain the cond will at reputation and account the conduction of the ood-will of neutrals and secure that bild in the affirmative, and instanced the source of certain supplies for our selves and our allies be not cut off. At the same time, it has to explain, justify and defend our interference with neutral trade. If we are to establish a line of blockade we must do it consistently with the rights of neutrals, and we must let through bona fide vessels for neutral ports. That is the intention of the supporters of the blockade resolution, and that is what is actually being done. We are unable to do more than attempt to stop all goods entering or leaving Germany ill goods entering or leaving Germany ing supplies of munitions and other nd that is being done.

CONTINUOUS VOYAGE. "We are applying the doctrine of ontinuous voyage," Sir Edward said. We quite agree that we want comnon action with our allies, and that swhat we had with France when the council was issued. The council was issued. The council was issued.

"If anybody wishes to realize the justification of our p.esent policy ne has only to read the correspondence has only to read the correspondence with the United States. If he wishes to read the objections taken to it—objections which any sort of policy might meet with—he can read the American notes to Great Britain, especially the last note which has not pecially the last note, which has not vet been answered.' In this connection Sir Edward said that consultation with France was with a view to pursuing not merely the same policy but to justify it by the same arguments and put the same case before the world.

On the general question, he said that the Government was trying to avoid friction with the neutrals by avoid iriction with the neutrals by securing agreements, not with the Governments, but with the traders, to dovernments, but with the traders, to tacilitate discrimination between genuine and enemy goods. He laid stress on the fact that Great Britain had a duty towards the allies in this matter,
