Capt. C. O. Allen arrived at his home in Kentville on Monday last after quite a prolonged absence in which he was doing effective but dangerous work for home and country. He was commander of a steamer plying between the East coast of England and France. He made eight successful trips across the Straits of Dover eluding the wily German submarine. Few will ever know the great work which England has done in keeping open the British channel and safely carrying men and supplies to the continent. Capt. Allen has served his country as well as if he had been in the firing line. He is looking well after his trying experience.

The remarkable fine weather during the fall gave place suddenly on Tuesday morning to a fall of the "beautiful snow". There was soon enough for sleighing in town and the runners have continued in use. Farmers report a large part of the turnip crop still ungathered and also some other crops which the snow and frosts would destroy. Turnips are always improved by frost if they can be gathered as soon as the ground thaws.
