TO KEEP A HOUSE COOL

A Few Ways in Which the Discomforts of the Heated Season May be Reduced.

The first sultry days suggest to the practical housekeeper the necessity of resorting to various means to reduce the heat within doors. The living rooms should be darkened early in the morning and kept so until the air has become cooled by sunset. Strict adherence to this rule will perceptibly reduce the temperature of a house. Air the rooms morning and night, and sedulously shut out the hot air of mid-day. These directions would be too commonplace to repeat if they were not so often ignored and forgotten.

Careful housekeepers take advantage in hot weather of the excellent gas and gasoline stoves, which supply all the heat necessary for cooking and for laundry work, and do not heat up the house. The cost of cooking by gas has been reduced by practical experiments to so low a figure that it has been proved to be a matter of small moment if ordinary care is exercised.

The use of cold meats, cold soups and substantial foods in a chilled state is a mistake. These dishes are more digestible when eaten hot. At no season of the year is there such a strain upon the stomach or are the vital powers so likely to be depressed as during the heated term. What is needed is stimulating, delicately flavored soups, light meats, refreshing fruits and dairy cold desserts. Cold meats are more difficult to digest than hot, and are therefore unfit for summer use unless they are served in salads with condiments to assist digestion. Curries now come into use. Meats served in curry are not only digestible, but stimulate the appetite, giving the tonic to the system so often wanting in hot weather. Ice cream and all delicate desserts that are properly served cold are digestible, because they are of light, digestible material.

It is an absurdity to serve a consommé cold, because, from its nature, a consommé should be jelly and not a liquid, when cold. A consommé that remains a liquid is too watery to be of value as food.

There is a tendency in summer to quench thirst by over-copious draughts of ice water and the various cooling effervescent drinks. This is a bad habit, and one children are apt to acquire, as well as older people, if they are allowed to do so. It is a matter of habit, which can be easily overcome. When the summer food is of the proper kind, and a sufficient amount of fresh ripe fruit is used, there will be less desire to quaff ice water in the abundant quantities with which so many Americans accompany their meals.

The lights of the house are often a great source of heat, and they also attract night insects. It is always a desirable thing to dispense with powerful burners and lamps as much as possible in summer, and return to the small lamp and the primitive but picturesque kerosene. Nothing gives a more beautiful light than candles. Candles are now within the reach of persons of moderate purses, and are made so that they do not run, while the dainty little night lamps which come in the most fascinating patterns are sufficient for any bedroom light.

There are a few other ways in which the discomforts of the heated season may be reduced, and many others will suggest themselves to the intelligent housekeeper.

The Thrifty Housewife.

The thrifty housewife is not the poor woman who spends her life indoors trying with might and main to make many dollars worth of work and worry to save a few cents. She is quite another variety of creature. She goes out and around, mingling with people who are apt to have ideas newer and fresher than her own. She is not too proud to adopt the theories of others if they are better than her own, and she sees advice and suggestions from the points of view of other women even if she does not entirely accept them. She considers health, physical, mental and moral, the only thing in the world worth worrying about, and refuses to lose sleep or appetite over trifles. She keeps her servants as long as she can, but if they go she does not wear sackcloth and ashes. Restaurants, hotels, charwomen and parlance she considers better substitutes for servants than the mistress wearing out her clothes, nerves and youth cooking meals for a hungry household. The truly thrifty woman is a creature endowed with logic and common sense whose price is far above rubies. She knows how to take care of herself so well that she seldom needs to be taken care of. She does not work herself to death for ten years and then remain a helpless invalid for twenty. She keeps young and her home is as attractive to her husband on his silver wedding day as it was when he and his bride entered it together for the first time. Her daughters usually are cooks, but they can also arrange flowers daintily and decorate a room with taste. They can sew and fashion all their own gowns and bonnets, perhaps, but they know how to dress their hands in the very newest style and understand perfectly the value of details and the power of prettiness. Progress and thrift are twin sisters and the assistance of each is invaluable to the other. —New York Commercial Advertiser.

Experimental Marriages.

England enjoys the questionable distinction of being the only civilized country in the world which not only tolerates but actually encourages experimental marriages. True, these marriages do not take place in England, but in the British islands, which are used as a penal settlement for Indians and Burmese convicts. The greater part of the convicts are men who are permitted to enjoy the freedom of the islands (of the class known in American penitentiaries as "trusties"), and they are allowed to marry women convicts who have completed four years of their time. The marriage takes place before the governor, a British officer, whereupon the woman is handed over to the man not for better or for worse, but for a seven days' trial. At the expiration of that term, if both are satisfied, they return to the governor's office and he officially declares he union as final or definite. Otherwise the man goes his way and the woman returns to her routine of work in the jail.

Two Fathers and Two Sons Did Battle Over a Dead Dog.

Birmingham, Ala., April 29.—A dog was the cause of a bloody fight three miles below Oxford, in which four persons participated — J. W. House and his son Gus and W. N. Johnson and his 14-year-old son. Both the Houses and the elder Johnson were shot with Winchester rifles, and one was dangerously wounded.

The elder House had killed a dog of Johnson's. Johnson pursued House and shot him twice through the stomach. Gus House, seeing the trouble, secured a gun and shot the elder Johnson, and was immediately shot by the 14-year-old son of Johnson, who escaped injury.

CROWDED WITH GREAT GRAFTERS

Runners Make Life a Burden for Strangers Arriving in Mt. Clemens.

Mt. Clemens, Mich., April 29.—The extent and extremes to which the soliciting and "plugging" for hotels and boarding houses in this city is carried is not generally known, but the detrimental effect of the underhanded and knifing warfare that is being waged is beginning to be felt and much dissatisfaction is expressed by citizens. From time to time ordinances have been enacted intended to correct manifest evils growing out of the sharp competition among runners who gather at incoming cars and trains to solicit for their respective hotels at so much per head. With the enforcement of the ordinances, runners are compelled to keep back at least 50 feet from a car upon its arrival.

With the abatement of this evil came the practice among some of the more enterprising runners of going to Detroit, and there soliciting patrons at the depots. This practice was kept up until the depot police put a stop to it, or at least to some of the runners, whom it is claimed had no pull with the police.

For some time it has been suspected that the Detroit Citizens' Street railway conductors were in on the graft, but no positive evidence was secured until yesterday, when a patient who was being harassed and importuned by a hungry lot of runners was taken in tow by a local policeman. The stranger stated that he was trying to get away from the runners that he had been warned against them by the car conductor, and said he wanted to go to a certain hotel, showing a card, which he said had been given him by the conductor with instructions to let none of the runners take him anywhere else, as they were a lot of sharks, their main object being to fleece strangers. There are a large number of runners here, and many of them are courteous and truthful, but a clique of grafters among them who would sell their own employer for a half dollar are the cause of most of the trouble. There is a growing sentiment here that no soliciting on the streets should be allowed.
