the "skinny" one. Kearns sidestepped and remarked hat he did not want to fight. "You gotta," spluttered the other, and rushed again. Kearns sidestepoed again and hit, just once. The big ellow took the uppercut flush on his hin and went down like a stricken oullock. He stayed there for a few by the bit, spoke to them and led hem up the short grade with a rush. Then he turned to the rancher, who was dazedly following up and said

"If you treated your animals bette ou wouldn't get so much and you wouldn't get it so hard." and th ne turned and continued his run. The rancher rub'sed his chin and hook his head, "To think that sliver licked me," he thought, dolefully. "I must be an wful mutt," and he quietly clucked
