Instead of Roses.

The florist held out a spray of exquisite pink roses alluringly, but the girl with the bright eyes and the thoughtful face turned suddenly away from them. "Two dollars for half a dozen; no, I don't think I'll take them after all," she said decisively and hurried resolutely out of the shop.

Outside she put the two-dollar bill she had been frowning back into her purse and stood looking into the florist's window, her eyes on a scarlet poinsettia, her thoughts far away.

Her Own Experience.

"When I was sick," she was thinking, "people sent me expensive flowers when I was sickest and could hardly enjoy them, and then of course there was nothing left when I was getting better and loved to have anything come to break the monotony."

And now Gretchen has typhoid and will probably be sick a long while and here I am starting to do the same thing. Of course I'd like to buy the roses and other things too, but I can't afford that. And anyhow it isn't the expense or even the beauty of the things that counts when you're sick so much as the fun of having something come to break the monotony.

Planning What Two Dollars Would Buy.

"I think I'll just go home now and not send her anything but a letter a few days while other people are sending flowers, and then I'll plan out how many little things I can get for the two dollars I should have spent for the roses, and I'll send them every day or two while she's getting better."

Anyone who has ever had a long convalescence knows what a delightful excitement it is to have the postman or the expressman bring some little package no matter how small its intrinsic value. To Gretchen in her monotonous typhoid convalescence there came every day or two some little reminder from the one friend who hadn't helped to fill her sickroom with flowers during the first few days of her illness.

First came half a dozen narcissus bulbs with a little rhymed legend telling of the sweetness they would bring if given a bowl of water to grow in. Next was a little hand-made scrap book of snapshots of various friends and relatives which the girl with the bright eyes had scurried about to gather.

Next came one of the English magazines that are full of pictures.

Ten Gifts for the Price of One.

A dainty little pudding helped make one of the patient's first meals appetizing.

A small but very sweet bunch of mayflowers followed; then a tumbler of home-made jelly; then a little ten-cent humorous magazine; next a little single flower vase with a jonquil in it; another magazine; and lastly a batch of delicious home-made candy.

As I said before, if you have ever had a long convalescence you can appreciate what the interest of having all these little things come, meant. If you haven't perhaps in planning to send something to a sick friend, you'll take Gretchen's word for the value of the plan. "Nothing in my life ever pleased me so much," she said. "I just don't believe I could have lived through that getting well if I hadn't had those little things to cheer me up."

If an invalid suffers from cramp and restlessness, try the effect of putting a large pillow under the mattress at the far end of the bed. This raises up the feet and lets the middle of the body hang, as it were, between the head and feet. This position is one which often gives great comfort to restless, feverish invalids in the aching stage of "flu."

SAVED BRUSSELS FROM DESTRUCTION.

Monsieur Max, the burgomaster of Brussels, will hold a high place among the heroes when the history of the war is written, for by the exercise of his tact and courage he preserved the peace and beauty of Brussels.

When the Germans entered Brussels as conquerors Monsieur Max insisted upon riding at the head of the ill-ordered procession. Thus he kept his foremost place, and made it clear, by leading the way, that he was not the captive, but the host, of the intruding guests. Arrived at the Town Hall, he preserved the same unruffled tact.

The general commanding the German, armed as usual by spies, knew precisely the number of rooms contained in the Town Hall, and announced that, proposing to stay there he should want beds arranged for 300. "See that there are beds in the Town Hall for 300," ordered Monsieur Max, determined at all hazards to stay at his post.

A man of peace, he showed himself more than a match in force and wit for his German colleague. When General von der Goltz put his revolver on the table of the Town Hall the gallant burgomaster, with a smile, laid by its side his fountain-pen. Yet if the pen became his hand better than the sword, his courage was always resolute.

The German governor, for instance, found it expedient to paste living proclamations on the walls of Brussels. Monsieur Max was not permitted to contradict them in kind. So he made speeches in the public square, and the truth ran swiftly through the streets of the city. Nor did anything that torched the sentiments of the citizens seem of small importance to him.

The people of Brussels had an enthusiastic fancy for pigeons. When the German Governor ordered the pigeons to be destroyed, Monsieur Max interposed successfully, and gathered them together into one large pen, where their owners might feed and visit them.

Thus by the gentle methods of a peaceful citizen, Monsieur Max saved his fellows from murder and the city from destruction.

Monsieur Max has done something more than protect the city of Brussels against a savage assault. He has set the office of the Burgomaster upon a pedestal of honor.

THE PLAIN WOMAN.

If you are beautiful, be glad that you are so richly blessed. If you are just a plain gray mouse, you can do much to add to your personal attractiveness and magnetism, for many a plain woman is beautiful if she cultivates certain little characteristics that everyone possesses.

First she must learn to dress herself attractively. No one can deny the singular fact that nearly everything fashionable is pleasing; hence the necessity of a woman keeping up with the modes, not only for street wear but as well for home.

In order not to be plain one does not need to dress elaborately. First study the mode of arranging your hair and select that which is not only smart, but the one most becoming to you. Do not in the haste and bustle to begin the day's work think that the quickest arranged coiffure will suffice. Neither be misled by the thought that a tight, closely arranged coiffure is suitable to all faces; in fact, there are but few faces that will not lose their beauty by such a coiffure.

Of all times of the day the morning is the one time when the coiffure should be neatly arranged if the hair is slightly waved; the wave may be produced by doing the hair up at night on curlers of some kind. I do not favor the use of hot curling tongs; they rob the hair of its natural oil, and in time the hair will break off and a short crop of unmanageable hair is the result.

Neatness is always a virtue, but the plain woman is not as attractive when dishevelled as the naturally beautiful woman.

VARIED PICTURES AT NICKEL TO-DAY.

A lengthy and varied programme has been arranged for the Nickel Theatre this evening. There are no less than seven reels which is one of the longest shows for some weeks. The pictures are by well known artists, too, and are about the best ever seen in the city. There is one two reel story entitled "The Mysterious Shot," a melo-dramatic masterpiece full of sensational incidents. The programme also includes "A Mutual Weekly," a comedy-drama; "Cherry" featuring Lillian Walker; "Pups on the Rampage," and two clever comedies: "A Flirt's Repentance," and "He Wanted a House." By attending the Nickel these days every one assists in the good work. Make the funds as large as possible.

No War Without S

THEY ARE GREATLY AT THE FRONT

(By a Sack-Maker)

Besides men, Lord Kitchener needs millions of sacks, and he can get them. He wants them, too, for as the war lasts.

Since August last, the Government has ordered not additional sacks for use in the Army and Navy.

No country could go to war without sacks, and the war could not last long if the supply of sacks were cut off. They are as vital as powder and shot. Since the Government started the Government sack-makers to trade with countries through which they were sent to the enemy. So contraband of war.

I cannot say that I have made a fortune out of sacks since the war, for my profit is only about a sixth of a penny; but my trade is booming, nothing to grumble about as many sacks to the Government I can make; my difficulties are quickly enough.

Business is Top.

There are between the sack-makers in London, is good with all of us, the case in Dundee, the sack and bag trade.

I have said that war is fought without sacks; but a large person has not the connection of the military to which sacks are put, and Navy. In addition, realise that there is some or profession—from old clothes merchants to vendors—that does not make sacks for some purpose. At the front sacks are being sugar, rice, flour, and coal for the field-kitchen, know they sent coal to the for making trenches and works.

Proper trenches cannot be made without sand-bags, as the although they are really with earth, not with sand made sacks, about eight wide by thirty-six inches used for this purpose. Imagine the number of sacks are now in use at the front.

Provisions and coal are sent out to the front sacks. When the sacks they are thrown into the is a constant demand for Navy.
