Amusing Stories of

It is a curious fact that many the great scholars of the world have been afflicted with absentmindedness says a London writer. The solution to this is somewhat difficult to find; but possibly it may be that the ac cumulation of knowledge in one par ticular direction tends to make us forgetful of the everyday things of

A man may be a clever mathema tician, a brilliant scientist, or an authority on Oriental languages, but at the same time he may be easily baffled by a question that a child of twelve would answer without hesita-

It is said of a certain professor o nathematics, who shall be nameless, that he was incapable of counting his own change with accuracy, and after making a purchase he made no pretence of checking the money which he received in change, but placed it in his pocket, and "trusted to luck." Of course, the story must be taken with the proverbial "grain of salt," for one can hardly imagine a senior wrangler being confused in a simple matter of dollars and cents.

Absence of mind may be annoying. and perhaps a serious disadvantage to the person suffering from the complaint, but to the impartial observer the consequences are often very amusing. The story is told of an old highway Shoreham, and upon coming to old be paid, said to the gatekeeper:

'What is there to pay?" "Pay, sir?" said the man with the tickets. "What for?"

"Why! my horse, to be sure," was the reply. "What horse, sir?" inquired the man, imagining that he was dealing the last few minutes I've developed with a lunatic. "There is no horse, "No horse? God bless me," said the dear old gentleman, piously, as he looked down between his legs, "I thought I was on horse back." Numerous are the stories of the late Lord Crewe, better known as Monckton-Milnes, the poet-peer,

When in London Monckton-Milnes used to dine at the Absent-mindedness. Athenaeum, and usually at the same table. Another member came rushing in one day to obtain a place for himself. But every seat was occupied save that reserved for Lord Crewe. "Tell him when he comes," said the would-be diner to the waiter, as I sat down, "that he's dined!" It is supposed the waiter found deception worth while, for when Lord Crewe arrived he was met by surprise and quiet expostulation. "You have dined an hour ago, my Lord," said the unscrupulous ser tim, as he retraced his steps. This story, although sounding somewhat highly colored, is vouched for by people who remember the in cident clearly.

On another occasion, he was see to enter the club looking tired, and hunghy, and strolling over to the mantelpiece, he picked up a printed list. After perusing it for several minutes he looked up and said: "Waiter. . I don't see anything t

The list contained the result of th Derby lottery.

It has been said that absence mind is a privilege of genius, and that fact should be taken into consideration with regard to the ensuing story. A certain professor of Oxford he accidentally allowed one 'foot to Shoreham Bridge, where tolls must one foot on the sidewalk and the other in the roadway. The proceeded in this mode of walking for some time, and upon being stopped by a friend who inquired after his health,

Shipmate of Fisher. Famous Naval Engineer Dies at

Sir John Harold Hefferman, 86 hose sudedn death is reported from Burton-on-Trent, was a famous naval engineer who retired nearly 30 years ago. He was a shipmate of the late Lord Fisher on the Warrior, the first British ironclad, in 1860. It was the vessel which acted as escort to Queen Alexandra when she came from Denmark in 1863 to marry King Edward. Sir John was awarded a gold medal in connection with the laying of the first Atlantic cable. He saw war service at Alexandria, and afterwards held high appointments in the Navy, the last being Chief Inspector of Machinery.
