Margaret Mather Stabs Herself.
At Peterboro the other night Margaret Mather, the famous actress, who played in this city a few nights ago, in acting Juliet, forgot she was using a real dagger instead of a trick dagger, which she forgot up when it strikes anything. She plunged the weapon into her side when she fell over the dead body of Romeo. She gave a suppressed scream as she fell, but picked herself up and dragged herself over to the body of her lover before the curtain dropped. An examination revealed the fact that Miss Mather had a narrow escape from serious, if not fatal, injury. The blade penetrated the clothing and corset, and struck the sixth rib about an inch below the heart, making but a slight flesh wound.

AT THE FAIR.
The great attraction to the left on entering the main building was the display of W. S. Irvine's Bazaar, consisting of those fragrant and lasting perfumes, Fedora and Winton Bouquet, the great sensations here hundreds of ladies may be seen to throng around that center with their handkerchiefs extended to the spray of the atomizer till they are almost saturated, then they pass on sweetly smiling at being the happy possessors of those popular colors for which Mr. Barkwell received first prize at the Provincial Exhibition and so completely filled the Crystal Palace to the great admiration of all. Surrounding these are Toilet Articles and pharmaceutical preparations all of which are most harmoniously arranged in every particular and contained in an inclosed case, on either side of which is to be seen elegant show bottles, towering to a great height and containing liquids of various bright and beautiful colors, but we would not do Mr. Barkwell and especially our readers justice if we failed to mention Barkwell's Sure Cure Cure and Barkwell's Bronchial Balm, they are well known and reliable articles, which he sends to all parts of the Province. A new one has been added—the now famous Diamond Tea—which promises, if possible, even greater success, and is really the greatest blood remedy ever offered to humanity.

Paul Peel's Speedy Climb
How It Has Been Accomplished

A well-knit figure a little above the height, dark, finely shaped, thick black lock falling over the forehead, clear-cut features, a brilliant dark eye, the ordinary gentleman save where the steps of the strict bound of convention presuming to be picturesque. Paul Peel, the artist. Gentle one would never suspect that man of whom most Canadians have heard and of whom every Canadian is proud.

Paul Peel is a native of the father, Mr. John R. Peel, being here. As a painter he was born with the earliest tastes and inclinations strongly in the direction of his profession. In 1877 he began his artistic studies in Philadelphia at the Academy of Art, where he remained two years. Here he studied anatomy and dissection with the zeal and enthusiasm of a true artist, and a week of these subjects—strikingly true to life—these could outlast so prolonged repulsiveness. In 1880 Mr. Peel came to London, England, where he attended the Royal Academy, and began to paint. The English painter, however, remained in London only three months, going from there to Paris. Here he remained ten years, studying under Lefevre, Boulanger, and Gerome. He speaks of the school of Gerome and Lefevre particularly as having been a more modern painter than the better colorist, who, as Mr. Peel says, "first opened my eyes." Four years he was under Constant's instruction.

The great advantage to Mr. Peel has been under several masters, and he has been saved from the slight to become a mere imitator of the school. He has listened to opposing dictating opinions. He has the latest teacher considered a master figure work denominated as "Fall of the Roman Empire," and he has been compelled to think and feel for himself. He is no imitator, and he is not a student of the school. He is a painter, and his ambition is to be a painter. His final goal of art, which he is now pursuing, is to be a painter, and he is now pursuing it.

Paul Peel is a hard worker, a mechanical drudge. He works with the underhand. The artist, he says, who puts energy into five hours of work, enough for one day. Emotion. It is like an afternoon of passion must be seized, held, the utmost. Feeling and truth, first, skill afterwards. The put into the work, the fewer required to perfect it. "After the picture which won the French Salon, and the admiration of the artist, it was completed by Mr. Peel. It was based upon a sudden. One of his own little ones, a bath, happened to take a picture of the open fire. It was a small child, and his little hands outstretched, the picture was complete—the loving mind of their father, the picture was immediately a last touch was given two At the French Salon it honored, and it is to be seen were sent in, of which only 2, received.

Mr. Peel returns from his convinced of the artistic country, but he is not a wide thinker there is not only a wide attractive field for native art. But it is among his own people, the Canadian artist is so at the perior of the Tecumseh, trans shapes and scenes which grew under his brush, he has talked tionally of "feeling," "tone," position," and "technique," the chance acquaintance with him and marks the expression now dreamily introspective, or, intelligent, becomes aware of that by seeing find out the secret. As easily might one by pinching fly's wing discover the hidden its beauty. Retire and and Paul's fame rests upon those very great and wholly genuine.
