Behold the Moulded Silhouette That Will Add New Charm to Frocks of Spring and Summer.

At last-at long, long last-the moulded silhouette is announced. No one who knows anything of fashion er of human nature could have thought that the straight, severely vertical figure would remain indefinitely. No one could have thought that waistlines and hips and other time-honored curves had departed from off the face of the fashion plate forever. The reaction was inevitable and the more severely vertical the frocks became the more it seemed that the reaction would come soon Yet such inevitable fashion reactions are not quite so simple as they may seem. They are not governed by anything so definite and unvarying as the swinging of the pendulum of a clock. There are numerous little of a clock. There are numerous hitle deterrents. In the case of the straight up and down frock there was the fact that women have become much more athletic. If they are not positively athletic, they are far more active physically. That seems to be a definite bit of progress and nothing the straight of ing short of an enormous upheaval in economic conditions and a changing of prevailing trends of though could bring back the ideals of fem-inine fragility and delicacy that would make the tight waists and other details of Victorian costumery

Then another thing: Since moulded silhouettes were in fashion before, a far larger proportion of women buy their frocks ready-made. There are comparatively no little dressmakers nowadays. The young woman who buys so much material and so much trimming and takes it to the dress-maker to be made up is hard to find. She either buys her frock readymade, manages to make it herself, or, if she be well supplied with lucre, or, if she be well supplied with hards puts the whole matter in the hands of some dressmaking establishment. The enormous majority of women buy their clothes ready-made. And the moulded silhouette offers certain difficulties for the ready-made frock At least the frock moulded with any-thing like the closeness that was known twenty years ago does.

So the problem is to find a type of frock that will not present too many difficulties to the maker of ready-made clothes for women who do not want to be bothered even with alterations, a frock that is comfortable, and possesses at the same time those obvious and indisputable advantages characteristic of the frock that shows more closely the outline of the human form divine than frocks have been doing within the past decade or so.

The French dressmakers are leading the way with frocks that by means of cleverly devised yokes, gores, tucks and other contraptions do give more outline. Apparently they are not trying to solve the problem by means of the raised waistline. Waistlines in the sense of a definite boundary between bodice and skirt, are really extinct. If there ette, a frock of brown lace and Myrtle of Kingscourt, Ontario, and waistline at all in the new

Granny Fox Dislikes Home of Chucks Because of Safety It Affords

Of course the new home of the Of course the new home of the Chucks was not secret. They didn't intend it should be. Johnny Chuck learned long ago that it is quite impossible to keep the kind of house he and Polly Chuck have a secret. It just can't be done. So whenever they get a new house they expect that every one in the neighborhood will know about it before long, enemies as well as friends. Instead enemies as well as friends. Instead of wasting time trying to hide their home they put all their thought and into making it safe though their enemies do know where Johnny politely.

"I don't like it. I didn't say that I like it. I said that it is a fine home," retorted old Granny Fox, her sharp eyes twinkling. "I don't like it at all. You are altogether too safe in it. I looked it all over before you were awake and there is no chance to catch you by surprise as long as you stay near your doorway. Of course it wasn't long before old Granny Fox heard that the Chucks had left the Long Lane and moved up to the Old Orchard. Reddy Fox told her. There is little going on in the Green Forest or on the Green Meadows that the Fox family doesn't know about. With Reddy Fox and Mrs. Reddy and old Granny Fox it is part of the business of living to
