PRINCIPAL GRANT closes his able Introduction with the following words:—"I abstain from saying here all that I feel concerning the author's work, because those who read this Preface are sure to read the book, and they will judge for themselves. Enough to say that to me it has been an unmixed delight to read the proof. Their racy descriptions give vivid glimpses of the good old times, and many Canadians will join with me in thanking them for allowing us to sit beside one of the cradles of our national life--inconabula nostrae gentis—and hear some of the first attempts at speech of the sturdy infant."
