

territory of Eastern Galicia to the River San is inhabited by 75% Ukrainians, 12% Poles, and 13% Jews.

Eastern Galicia, ethnographically, is purely Ukrainian territory. The city of Premysl (on the San) was built by a Ukrainian duke and it bears his name to this day. The city of Jaroslaw (on the San), bears the name of another Ukrainian duke. East of the River San there are no places with Polish names, or if such they are Polonized Ukrainian names. Lemberg is a Germanized form. It is known in the Ukraine and Poland as L'viv, originally Lvov from the Ukrainian king of that name, and was for a long time the historical capital of the western Ukrainian kingdom.

In the eyes of Ukrainians the Polish protectorate is truly a bugbear, for only Ukrainians, especially in Galicia, realize what Polish protection means.

We all know the German slogan: "Drang nach Osten" (march towards East), and we very well know what this has meant to Poles in Upper Silesia and Posen, and to the Czechs in Bohemia, and this same destructive German influence re-acted tenfold upon Ukrainians in Volhynia and Galicia. The German plan was to wage a war of extermination upon the Poles, and the Polish nobility
