shall be elected by the people from those particularly eligible.

Parliament shall elect and the emperor shall appoint the premier, who will recommend the other members of the cabinet, who shall also be appointed by the emperor. The imperial prince will be ineligible for the office of premier or members of the cabinet or administrative heads of the provinces.

If the premier when impeached by parliament does not dissolve parliament at his request, one cabinet shall not be allowed to dissolve parliament more than once.

Authority of Emperor.
The emperor shall assume direct control of the army and navy, but when this power is used in connection with internal affairs the emperor must observe special conditions to be decided by parliament.

11. Imperial decrees cannot be issued to replace the law except in the event of urgent necessity in which case they may be issued in accordance with special conditions.
12. International treaties shall not be concluded without the consent of parliament, but a treaty for the conclusion of peace or a declaration of war may be made by the emperor if parliament is not sitting, the approval of parliament to be obtained afterwards.

13. Ordinances in connection with the administration shall be issued by acts of parliament.

Financial Powers.
14. In case the financial budget fails to receive the approval of parliament, the government may not act upon the budget of the previous year nor may it make any expenditure not provided for in the budget, but it may be expended for the government shall not adopt extraordinary financial measures outside the budget.

15. Parliament shall fix the expenses of the imperial household and any increase of these expenses.
16. Regulations in connection with the imperial family must not conflict with the constitution.

17. The two houses must establish the machinery for the administration of the court.
18. The emperor shall promulgate the decisions of parliament.

19. The national assembly shall set upon articles 3, 5, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 18 until the constitution is promulgated.

Constitution Accepted.

ARE YOU AS WELL AS A YEAR AGO?

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Point the Way to Health and Strength

Ask yourself the important question whether you are as strong as you were a year ago, as healthy as you should be. Many a reader has to confess "No." Some weakening ailments have during the past year laid the duties of life and seriously clouded the outlook of the coming days. It may be rheumatism with its sharp twinges of pain, indigestion and lack of energy, or the pains and ailments which only common folk know. It is well to know that all these weakening disorders arise from the impoverished condition of the blood. Renew and enrich your blood and all your troubles will cease. This is a strong statement, but it is made on the testimony of thousands who once suffered, but who have gained health and strength by the aid of the new, rich blood-supplying Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

We can quote thousands of cases similar to the following: Mr. Joe Grandmason is a young man well known in the town of St. Jerome, Que. He says: "For a couple of years I began to find my strength failing, but did not dream that the trouble was serious. As I grew weaker I began to deteriorate, but it did not help me. The least exertion made my heart palpitate violently, my stomach seemed out of order and my whole system became so run down that I was finally forced to quit work. I had now been steadily growing weaker and my condition was very naturally growing discouraging. At this juncture I read of a use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and decided to try them. I took the Pills faithfully for about two months, gradually growing stronger and at the end of that time I was as well as any man could be. I shall always praise the Pills for the blessing of good health."

TOOK DEVIOUS COURSE TO OBTAIN JUDGESHIP

Democratic Candidate for Bench Gives Piquant Evidence in Judiciary Investigation.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The judiciary scandal in Long Island had further light thrown on it to-day in the further hearing before Justice Scudder in the supreme court in the Queen's County court house in Long Island.

A sensation of the day was the testimony of Patrick E. Callahan, one of the Democratic candidates for the three new places created by the last legislature for the supreme bench in the Long Island district. Callahan turned on his party associate, Wm. Willett, who is charged with conspiring with others to secure nomination by the payment of money.

Now, Mr. Callahan, in view of what Willett said on convention day in borrowing the $1000 fee you consider him fit to be a supreme court justice?" asked Assistant District Attorney De Forest referring to previous testimony of a loan secured by Willett.

"No," shouted Callahan, rising from his chair and looking straight at Willett.

Callahan continued: "Ketchum (the other candidate) and I asked Willett to get off the ticket, and when he refused we told him that he would have to get off, but he did not. Willett said that it would make him appear criminal to get off the ticket."

Other besides Willett, named in the tentative charges into which the inquiry is being held are Louis W. Lawsky, Democratic leader in Queen's County, and Wm. McCooey, Democratic leader of Brooklyn.

POSTAGE IN OTHER DAYS.

For years the world's postoffice acted as if their mission was to prevent people from writing letters. The present generation, which sends a postal card from Maine to the Philippines for a cent, has little idea of how heavy the postage rates were in former times.

Rowland Hill convinced the English Post Office Department that its duty was not to encourage and not to prohibit letter writing, but to make it as easy as possible.

In those days correspondents looked out for friends about to go from one city to another by the fact that they transmitted their letters. Even merchants used this method for sending business letters.

In English towns it was formerly the principal duty of the "out-door" clerk to hunt for friends about to go to London, so that letters might be transmitted by the fastest means.

It was then the custom for everyone intending to travel to secure a seat beforehand, just as a berth is now engaged on an ocean steamer. The clerks used to go round to the coach office and ascertain by whom places were booked. If friends, they were told to be ready to go, and if not, they were told to be ready to go.

Women were in the habit of allowing their correspondents to accompany them on the journey, and the man of the house was the incentive from without which spurred into action the inherent but dormant literary talent of the wife.

"Yes," replied the author of the Ball "Yallahs," and the wit of librettos were written, but the success of the efforts which has attended my humble work was the only one that did any good. "My father never said that any one was the incentive from without which spurred into action the inherent but dormant literary talent of the wife."

When the late Sir W. S. Gilbert was 27, and was known to the world as a promising writer, his father, who was a retired naval surgeon, wrote a semi-medical book on the subject of "Shirley Hall Asylum," his first book. Not long ago, a lady, who was then preparing a biography of the younger man, heard that the son was the incentive from without which spurred into action the inherent but dormant literary talent of the father.

A NOVEL CONTEST
A novel contest took place some time ago at the Edinburgh corporation baths between one of the strongest swimmers in Scotland and a well-known angler. The contest occurred in a pool eight feet long, and forty feet wide. The angler was furnished with an eleven foot trolling rod and an undressed silk line. The line was fixed to a girth belt, made expressly for the purpose, by a swivel immediately between the shoulders of the swimmer at the point where he had the greatest pulling power. In the second trial the line snapped. In the second the angler, lacking line, edged without altogether slackening line, and several porpoise dives were well handled. The swimmer then tried cross swimming from corner to corner, but ultimately was beaten, the match ending with a victory for the rod and line.

Another contest took place in which the angler employed a very light trolling rod and an undressed silk line, and one-half ounces, the line being the same as that used with the trolling rod. The swimmer, whose aim evidently was to smash the rod, pulled and leaped into the water. He held steady, however, and in about five minutes was forced to give in. The rod was again successful. At the final moment competitors were almost exhausted.

THE CHEERFUL LOSER.
The man who can look a run of hard luck in the face without getting stewed to the gills will never have to borrow a meal ticket from his wife's relations. Some men can't lose a game of three-ball billiards without going home and kicking a sweet-faced cat off the front porch. You can win an old sport to an old chair at a poker table for six months, and if he leaves the premises at 80 cents short he will emit a roar that will wake the neighbors in the next township. The man who can smile when his wife whistles the cellar floor and makes his bank account look like the monthly bank statement of the foreign missionary society won't have to back away from his friends for lack of a ten-spot. The grouch who tries to break the board of trade with a sneering and whines like a bed-ridden water spaniel when his wife slips is about as popular in the business world as the life insurance agent who never knows when to let go. Place your money on the Sunny Jim who greets adversity with a cheerful grin and a light heart.

Monument to Mme. de Sevigne.
A statue of Mme. de Sevigne was unveiled to-day at Vitre in Brittany, near the town of Les Rochers, where she loved to live. The statue, which she exquisitely described in her letters, M. Paul Deschamps, the Academi, delivered the inaugural address, and the company paid a visit to the chateau de Les Rochers, in which the famous family preserved many relics of its famous ancestors. What, we wonder, would happen to the London manager nowadays who should dare to put on the stage a version of a Shakespearian tragedy as was played in Ireland a hundred years ago? Mrs. Earle in her recent book "Memories and Memories" gives a Dublin play bill of 1803, which is well worth quoting.

The play was "The tragedy of Hamlet," originally written and composed by the celebrated Dan Hayes of Limerick, and inserted in Shakespear's works. The title role is taken by a gentleman "who between the acts will perform several solos on the patent bagpipe, which performs two times at the same time."—From the University Correspondent.
