rested on Saturday night, Aug. 4, '06. This is an error of the officer on the beat where this affair happened, of which I am a personal witness. My boy was feeding his horses at 6.15 o'clock and was not home till 7.05, which was 55 minutes after the affair happened. Now, Mr. Editor, this is the second time my son has been arrested this year for affairs of which he has not been a party to. I think the officer must have poor eyesight, when my boy went with Rogers' father and mother to the station to get bail, and they did not know him, but when he went with Rogers' lunch a little later he was arrested. Hoping you will insert this answer to your article in your holiday edition of World.

Editor. World: Who is "E. W. T.," author of the stirring lines. In Reply to Kipling," by a Canadian, appearing in to-day's Sunday World? You certainly achieved a "scoop" to secure this poem. There is a lilt and swing to it which disarms criticism, tho, doubtless, the author could readily put more finish on it, but just as it stands, it certainly is a trenchant reply to Kipling's verses. It ought to be published in England Frank M. Field.

Balmy Beach.

Balmy Beach.

The annual sports and games of the Balmy Beach Club, land and aquatic, held on the grounds and lakefront, were thoroly enjoyable. The attendance was a record one, and the sports of whatever nature were entered into with a zest which ensured the keenest competition. The private residences were lavishly decorated with bunting, while the Alexandra and other large lakeside homes presented a strikingly handsome appearance. The land sports were held on Beach-avenue and furnished two hours of good all-round athletics. The officers for the day were: W B Orr, president; T F Hodgson, first vice-president; J J Wallace, second vice-president; C G Ross, secretary; George Oakley, treasurer. The starters were W G Lyon and W R Draper, while D Lauder and Dr Edwards officiated as clerks, Tom Hodgson, James Wallace and Dr. Carswell acted as judges.

NO VALETS FOR PREMIERS.

Neither Campbell-Bannerman Nor Balfour Uses One.

The valet is a disappearing type in England and wealthy men, except pro-fessed dandles, are to a great extent doing without the services of a bodyservant.

The present Liberal cabinet includes Mr. William Lane of Winnipeg, who has been spending his furlough in Ontario, will return shortly to continue his business as real estate broker in that booming city.

The present Liberal cabinet includes few men who employ valets, although one or two may be classed as "exquisites" and have a couple of men to attend to their personal appearance. In the house of commons, which has now a great Liberal majority and a strong labor party, the proportion of members who have valets is naturally very low.

Premier Campbell-Bannerman does employ a valet, and Arthur J. Balfour, the late premier, also dis-penses with the services of a personal servant. His footman looks after his wardrobe, and when that functionary is absent, Mr. Balfour calls in the invaluable Jane, a retainer, who has been in the household for many years, to lay out his dress suit.

The decline of the "gentleman's gentleman" is a corollary of the decline of the French chef in aristocratic households, and a symptom of the economy that has become compulsory as a result of the South Afri-
