my bread being made by those who cannot get my bread to sell, and by others who are selling other baker's bread. Now, let's save a whole lot of talking and get down to facts.. My bread weighs three pounds to the large loaf, and is more likely to go over that weight than under it; another thing - I am not afraid to say that in all probability my bread weighs more than any other-So much for what you hear. Now, I wish every individual in this city would take the trouble to weigh their bread. The city is full of scales, you can get your bread weighed without any trouble, and, in justice to me and to yourself, weigh it-and be convinced.

There is No Lawrence's Bread Sold in Grocery Stores

I have decided to sell my bread retail only, and direct from my own waggens. It is the only way the customer can be sure of getting my bread, for heretofore storekeepers thought all bread was alike, and when cus tomers asked for Lawrence's Bread they were given any o'd kind, and that, of course, reflected badly on my product. For that and other reasons I shall not sell any more of my bread to stores, but will sell to
