burg, Penn., a brother-in-law of Hon. Wm. the money was used:

My iron wheels are lightning speed, And o'er the line I dash; Nor rain nor blinding hail I heed, Nor tempest's angry flash. Through verdant vale and dewey dell, O'er mountain, gorge or stream, e music of my clanging bell Wakes bird-life from its dream.

I hear the wild canary's note,
The gress bird's low, sweet song;
And from the full-plumed redbreast's threat
A lay so deep and strong. I see the sturdy growth of pine, The bracken's feathery bed; The clinging ivy-arms that twine. Around a heart that's dead.

I see afar the ocean crest,
And note its silvery seen,
I view the snow-capped mountain's drest.
In robe of emerald green.

O'er rushing, roaring river, Whose rapids foam in one wild dance Whose song goes on forever.

And through the darkest dead of night My breath soars to the sky. Where there is but the angel light Of one all-seeing eye.

God speed me onward! May my fate Be this strong, safe sure breath, And to my living, human freight. A song of life, not death.
