CAUSE OF THUNDER.

THUNDER.—Lightning, by its repulsive force upon the particles of air along its path, produces a space. Into this the air rushes with a violence proportionate to the intensity of the electricity. A separate sound is produced at each point along the line of the flash, and although simultaneous, they reach the ear of an observer in slow succession. An observer at A will first hear the sound from the concussion at a, next at c and finally at b.
