A Soldier Who Made Good Referring to the opportunities offered by the war to men who have lost their characters to make a fresh start. Sir W. Middlebrook, M.P., speaking in Leeds, told how quite recently he learnt from the lips of one of His Majesty's Judges of the case of a young man who coming up for trial for a serious offense was given the chance of enlisting so that he might retrieve his position. The judge who dealt with the case had since learnt that among some soldiers called to the presence of the king, and upon whose breasts were pinned marks of honor, was the young man who two years before had stood in the dock as a criminal.
