THE SHEEP HERDER.
(From the Denver Republican.)
Unshorn, unkempt and with his throat laid bare to winds that sweep the plain,
He slinks into the frontier town
And quickly shambles forth again.
The voices of his fellow men
Slink and discordant, and his breast leaps with longings for a friend—
His all is yonder in the West.
The friend he loves is Solitude—
That voiceless creature of the vast,
Whose presence makes him feel that he is
The while a smiling world shall last.

And so the herder turns from men,
And, with his panting dog at heel,
Flees to the life which all his kind Cannot interpret, yet can feel!
