MONDAY EVENING, JULY 13.

The Price of Reciprocity.

The salaries of the employees by the Dominion Government to sing its praises in St. John date not from Mr. Brown's Reciprocity Treaty, because they know that Mr. Mackenzie will stand no nonsense of that kind from its recipients of his favors, and they are ashamed to say anything in its support. We may expect them to keep comparatively silent, therefore, until the Minister gives them the hint that was given to the Cape Breton Postmaster by the Minister of Militia—"The Government will support every one of its employees to support its measure." One of the organs, too nervous to say nothing, keeps turning the treaty over and over, seeking for some decent excuse for favoring it; another merely tells its readers that its arguments against the treaty have itself produced; and the other contents itself by insinuating that the treaty is so popular that no opponent of it can be elected to any office in the Board of Trade. Those who view the treaty from the top of the fence, determined to jump down on the Government side just as soon as possible, shun the coal and gravel that is truly potent, and will finally declare that, whereas it is desirable that our coal, etc., should be sold in the United States free of duty, therefore resolved that the Reciprocity Treaty should be ratified.

There is little opposition to the reciprocal provisions of the treaty, except from some of the manufacturers, and little active advocacy of them except by the representatives of the interests to be directly benefited. The opposition to the treaty is in the opinion of the people to be paid for reciprocal trade facilities. A man may prefer roast beef at dinner, or he may not, but he would not be likely to pay an enormous price for it when he could dine at the regular rate at the other food. We favor reciprocity with the States, but we are opposed to paying an enormous sum to secure it. In all the discussions on the treaty, in the Board of Trade and elsewhere, it should be remembered that we are to surrender our monetary rights under the Treaty of Washington, tap the Treasury by the construction of the costly Caughnawaga Canal for the exclusive benefit of New York, and give up all hope of the building of the Bay Verte Canal for a half century. This is the price we are to pay as a bonus for the exchange of certain reciprocal privileges. Shall we open our markets to the United States manufacturers and pay this gigantic price besides for the privilege of freeing the United States importers of our coal, lumber, etc., from paying duty thereon? That is the question.

MacMahon in the Saddle.
It has been customary, ever since MacMahon became President of France, to consider him as a mere substitute for somebody else—to consider the Assembly as trying to agree on a permanent ruler, and MacMahon as plotting to surrender the reins of office to Bourbon or Bonaparte. Nobody has appeared to think that the Marshal enjoys the luxury of office and means to retain it as long as possible, but we should think that his late message to the Assembly would open the eyes of all to the fact that MacMahon likes his seat in the saddle, and has resolved not to be ousted from it by the power that put him in. The cable brings no press comments on the revolution he has made, but it is not possible that the real significance of his declaration should have escaped anybody. His message to the Assembly last Thursday as read by Gen. Cissey, Minister of War, is as follows:

When you, by the law of the 20th of November last, deferred the executive power into my hands for seven years, you intended to allow to public interests that security which precarious institutions are powerless to give. This vote conferred upon me great duties, for the fulfillment of which an account must be given to posterity. I can in no case be permitted to withdraw. It also conferred rights which I shall never exercise. Your confidence rendered my powers irrevocable for a fixed term in the future. I have no constitutional bills. In accordance with the law of the 20th of November last, I shall employ the means with which I am armed by the law to defend my power. This course, I am convinced, is in accordance with the expectations and the will of the Assembly, which, when it placed me at the head of the Government, intended to create a strong, stable, and respected power.

But the law of November 20 must be completed. The Assembly cannot neglect tearing up its engagements. Let it permit me to pressurgely remind it of the claims for the fulfillment of that engagement. The country demands the organization of the public powers, and questions which were reserved must be settled. Further delays will depress trade and hamper the prosperity of the country. I hope the Assembly will not fail to patriotically fulfill its obligations. I adjure it in the name of the highest interests of the country, to deliberate without delay upon the questions which must no longer remain in suspense. The Assembly and the Government are jointly responsible. I am desirous of accomplishing all my duties, and my most imperative duty is to insure to the country defined institutions, security and calm. I have instructed the Minister to inform the Constitutional Committee concerning the points upon which I believe it essential to legislate.

Could any declaration be more explicit than this? He says plainly that he is President for seven years and will remain such regardless of their votes. He holds himself accountable to France, he permits to withdraw from his position, that is, in no case will he resign the Presidency. "You yourselves,"

Lacey Trial.
Minnie O'Donnell and Thomas Chandler were tried in the Police Court to-day on the charge of stealing $10 from Peter Holsten. The alleged robbery took place in one of the saloons of Sheffield street on Friday last. The young man is a Norwegian sailor, and wandered down there on the day in question. He could speak very little English, and it was necessary to have an interpreter in Court. His testimony was apparently truthfully given, and the cross-examination did not shake it very much. All the afternoon was occupied in hearing the Lordly-Hatt case. Mrs. Lordly's cross-examination was concluded but no other facts than those we have published were learned. A man who lived at the house at Beaver Lake testified to the familiarity that existed between the prisoner and Lordly. They called each other "Pa" and "Ma." James Fawley, a ship-carpenter, testified to spending the night at the house at the Lake. In the morning he saw the prisoner and Mr. Lordly in bed together. Though subjected to a severe cross-examination he maintained the truth of his story. A colored man who was cook at the Brunswick House was the last witness. He was then Mrs. Lordly alleges she was turned out, and stated some time after Mrs. Hatt was installed as mistress. His testimony was quite amusing. In answer to a question from Mr. Skinner he said that Mrs. Hatt called Lordly "Pa" sometimes, and "Pap" at other times. "Which do you consider the most endearing?" asked the counsel. "Oh, I think Pap is." "So do I," said Mr. Skinner. Witness said he once saw Mr. Lordly lying on the bed and prisoner sitting beside him, and in answer to Mr. Pugsley he said he did not think much harm—never had done it himself, but would not object to it. He said that Mrs. Lordly was an easy woman to get along with, and that he left the service after Mrs. Hatt took charge, as they could not agree about cooking. As Mr. Skinner has to attend the Albert Circuit the case was put off until this day week.

There was one prisoner for drunkenness this morning and an abuse-assault case to be disposed of.

Michael Haney, the victim of the flowing bowl, arrested in Main street on Saturday was fined $4.

Robert King was charged with assaulting Mary Ann McCready, and she and her little daughter were charged with using abusive language to him. The affair was not a very serious one and a fine of $4 was imposed on King. It appearing that King had only brought Mrs. McCready and her daughter up for spite the charges against them were dismissed.

John Robert McConeas was arrested on a peace warrant, on suit of his father-in-law, Robert Wiseman. He avails himself to keep him from going to gaol.
