MANUFACTURERS AGREE

At their dinner in Toronto Thursday evening the gentlemen of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association made it quite manifest that they did not stand in the way of the adoption of the Chamberlain idea. Ever since Mr. Chamberlain gave his attention to the preferential trade scheme the free trade Canadian journals-while knowing and admitting that the scheme would be of exceedingly great benefit to Canada-have been putting They have been trying to stir up opposition to the scheme among the manufacturers of Canada by misrepresenting Chamberlain's words and intentions, and have acted in every way as if the proposed scheme were to be a curse to Canada instead of a very great benefit. "But what do the Canadian manufacturers say?' has been the favorite question with these people, who have more interest in the free trade fad than they have in the welfare of the country which gives them a very good living. The question is now answered, authoritatively and finally, and this is the answer of the manufacturers assembled in Toronto Thursday:

We favor an immediate revision of our present Canadian customs tariff, and the adoption of:

"(1) A general tariff framed especially to meet Canadian conditions, based in principal upon and approximating to that now in force in the United States, a tariff that shall protect Canadian industries and nursuits as efficiently as the tariff of the United States protects the iudustries of that country.

"(2) We favor a policy of reciprocal preferential trade within the British empire whereby, through readjusttems, the United Kingdom and her colonics will each grant to the products of the other a substantial preference against the products of foreign coun-

"Blow away" said the Westerner; "you can live in New York without brains, but you can't without money."

Recently a boating party, on the Bos Recently a boating party, on the Boston Harbor, was passing Rainsford Island, upon which there is a farm school for wayward boys. It being a holiday, these young farmers had the freedom of the island and were apparently having a very jolly time on the shore. A lad of seven, who had been intently watching their sport from the deck of the boat, turned to his mother and said eagerly: "How bed do you have to be to get "How bad do you have to be to get there, mamma?"

There was good talk at a tea party given once at the observatory of Cam-bridge, England. Sydney Smith was there, and although he took the wonderthere, and although he took the wonderful work of the place seriously, he had a light manner of expressing himself. The party had been led up to look at Jupiter, and this was his comment: "Jupiter? If you hadn't told me, I should have taken it for a bad shilling." "Where is Sir John Herschel?" asked one of the guests. "He is at the Cape of Good Hope," said the astronomer, Airy. "He was ordered there to observe the stars of the southern hemisphere." "Ah," said Sydney Smith, "I suppose you astronomers, when you are ill, are advised to change your stars just as we ordinary mortals are told to change our air."

It is related that one evening last winter, at a dinner given in honor of Mrs. Pat Campbell, in New York, the English actress remarked, loftily: "They wanted me to play "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" in England, but I thought it a vulgar character, and I can't be gross, you know." This from the woman whose whole fame rested on her impersonations of women with malodorous pasts or notorious presents was astounding to all present, each one of whom had said something in extenuation of the sins of poor Tess and in admiration of Hardy's masterpiece as a dramatic characterdrawing. For a moment, there was an embarrassed silence, and then Miss Warren, who is to star in the play this sea son, spoke up innocetily: "It is dreadful to be so sensitive. I expect, Mrs. Campbell, you find it hard even to accept your make of the gross receipts."

After severe exposure bathe the face in very warm water, after which cold cream is in order. To cure a wart scrape a carrot finely and apply a poultice of it for seven or eight nights to the affected part. A drop of castor oil in the eye to remove a foreign body is as useful and much more manageable than the better known flaxseed.

An old German remedy for hiecough is to make a tea of sunflower seed, about a tablespoonful to a cup of hot water, allow to cool and sip slowly, taking about ten swallows, holding your breath the while. This seldom fails to cure the most obstinate cases.

Smile More and Frown Less. If women only smiled more and frowned less, how much happier would the world be! If we only could persuade ourselves to believe that gladness is our rightful heritage and that happy hearts are the most acceptable to God and the most conducive of good, then we would find it easy to cultivate a sunshiny disposition. "Oh," you say, "it is impossible for me to be happy with such circumstances as mine!" That is the very reason why you should may overcome your circumstances and not let them overcome you. It is sur-prising what a different aspect things will assume when one endeavors to better oneself. Selfishness and unhappiness go hand in hand, while thoughtfulness and kindly consideration for others prepare the way for joy. We are often the cause of our own unhappiness, although we may not be willing to put the blame on ourselves. Where there is the desire to be happy the means are always within reach.

Mme. Bernhardt's Home.

Sarah Bernhardt seems to be the happiest woman in the world in her fortress home, perched high on the black, rugged rocks of this quaint island, Belle-Isleen-Mer, a couple of leagues from the coast of Brittany. The stone house is built on the ruins of an old granite fort constructed by Vauban during the reign of Louis XIV. Sarah Bernhardt invariably passes the month of August in her sea-bound domain, and has this year bought a herd of little black Brittany cows, half a dozen big, mouse-colored donkeys with white-tipped noses, and ten smooth-haired fox terriers. The actress and her granddaughter, Mile. Simone Bernhardt, now a charming young woman of seventeen, drink fresh milk, ride about the island on donkeys, play tennis and wade ankle deep in the sea in quest of shrimps. Corsets and fashionable gowns are absolutely tabooed. Sarah has built on her property a spacious studio, where she amuses herself painting seascapes and landscapes in pastel. Her son, Maurice Bernhardt, and his wife and their two children, Miles. Simone and Yleviane Bernhardt, live in a nice. Her son, Maurice Bernhardt, and his wife and their two children, Miles. Simone and Vicylane Bernhardt, live in a nice, airy house a stone's throw distant from Sarah's fort, upon which waves a large white flag bearing in scarlet letters the well-known motto, "Quand Meme!" George Clairin, the painter, and a few literary and artistic friends are just now her guests. Life at Belle-Isleen-Mer is simple and patriarchal. Large bowls of delicious coffee and milk, or chocolate, with fresh-laid eggs and rolls of rye bread, are served in the bedrooms from 7 o'clock to 10 in the morning. The morning costumes are decidedly prerrom 7 o'clock to 10 in the morning. The morning costumes are decidedly pre-Raphaelite, consisting of ample, flowing mantles of Turkish toweling and sandals. A few days ago Sarah met with a slight accident while playing tennis. Shomade a high jump in order to "smash" a swift ball, but in doing so sprained the cords of her left ankle. Ecchymosis ensued, and the surgeon of the 62nd Regiment of the line, quartered on the Island, was sent for. Compresses were wound around the salf of the less are wound around the salf of the less are island, was sent for. Compresses were wound around the calf of the leg, and absolute rest was prescribed. This "absolute rest" is highly repugnant to Sarah and sadly interferes with her vacation. She is nevertheless bravely bearing with She is nevertheless bravely bearing with her misfortune, and, seated with leg extended in a long armchair, is borne about over the rocks and cliffs by two stout Brittany sailor lads with incredible rapidity. Sarah's Belle-Isle costume is simple, artistic and serviceable. Yesterday afternoon, as I happened to be sitting with her friends and her two grand-daughters in the large hall which serves the double purpose of library and diningroom, Sarah was borne into the room on her armchair, which seems like a sort of throne. Her smile was bright and cheerthrone. Her smile was bright and cheer-ful. The swell of the ocean after the ful. The swell of the ocean after the severe south-westerly gale of the last lew days was imposing, and she remarked: "You see, each waye that break on the rocks beneath my window cometo me as a friendly greeting from American accounts of the second of t ca—your country is my next-door neigh-bor." Sarah wore a most becoming cream-colored felt hat, with cream pon-gee pugree folded and draped over it-broad brim. The waist was of cream-colored flannel, fitting loosely and gracefully to the body, unencumbered by corets—articles of dress that Sarah deests. "Corsets!" she screamed, "I hate ous, unseemly, unhealthy and ridicuous."

Whereupon the graceful little Mile. Simone chimed in with the remark:

"Grandma is quite right; I hate them, too!" Sarah Bernhardt wore about her neck a plain golf tie of cream silk. Her skirt was of cream flannel, like the waist, and hung in loose folds, giving ample swing to the limbs, but was cut very short, and did not even reach the ankles. Cream-colored, hand-knit stockings were worn, and her feet were encased in dainty little white doeskin low-cut shoes without heels, provided, with

Sarah does a great deal of reading at Belle-isle-en-Mer; her favorite authors this summer are Shakespeare, Voltaire this summer are SLakespeare, voltams and Paul Hervieu. Her secretary and her stage manager are with her, and she attends to business with them during an hour or so each evening. Sarah is enchanted with Belle-Isle-en-Mer; and the good-natured fisherfolk adore her as the sland divinity.-C. I. B. in New York

A man came to him to secure the authentication of a document to be used in court in the United States, a service for which the regular fee is two-dollars, which Mr. Osborne duly charged. He was, he explained, by profession a glass-eater, but was temporarily out of employment after a series of performances at country fairs; and he had only expected to pay a quarter.

fairs; and he had only expected to pay a quarter. He fumbled in his pockets a moment in a distressed way, then brightened suddenly and suggested a compromise—he would not pay in money, but by giving his creditor a special performance.

Believing him to be one of the numerous fakirs who rely on sleight-of-hand in so-called glass-eating feats, Mr. Osborne expressed increduity.

"Gimme a thin goblet," said he, "and I'll eat it all vn."

The goblet was brought. The impe-

The goblet was brought. The impecunious American grasped it firmly with both hands as a boy would a big apple, and munched off a great piece. The fragments crackled horribly under his large teeth, Mr. Osborne reports, and disappeared down his throat.

He was precisely what he claimed to be—a human ostrich; but it was not a pleasant way of receiving a notarial fee, and the Consul hastened to inform the glass-cater that his debt was discharged.

"The heart," exclaimed the poet, "Is a casket which love alone can unlock."

"M'yes," replied the cynic. "But money is the skeleton-key that's very apt to produce the same result."

A charming, instructive, laughable play is "The Burglar," to be seen on Friday, Noy. 27th, at the Grand. It aroused and held Madison Square theater audiences in New York for part of a season, and has since toured the country with gratifying success.

ss. Even the blase theatre-goer, as well as the nardened stock, are susceptible to their emotions as they see a desperate burglar sofftened by a child pleading, and the lattle ones in the lattle ones in the lattle ones in the strings finds and touches a hidden, but tender chord, and makes it thrill to the sweet music of humanity

A famous play by a famous author, "The Eurglar," by Augustus Thomas also author of "Alabama," will shortly be seen here. This play particularly appeals to the ladies and children, as one of the principal roles is enacted by a child not yet seven years of age, and this costuming of the ladies is very rich and appropriate. A pretty love story is entwined in the plot of "The Burglar" and the sensational developments, though mild, are absorbingly interesting.

The third act of the play is the the third act of the play is the dramatization of Mrs. Francis Hodgeson Burnett's story of "Editha's Burglar," which was in vogue about the same time with "Little Lord Fauntelroy," and has for its centre raunteuroy," and has for its centre of interest a precocious and quaint little girl, as the other has aprecocious and quaint little boy. The play is full of dramatic situations, with enough humorous by-play to relieve the tension, and it grows in interest from start to finish, although it is restricted. though it is simple in its plot and n its business.

Anecdotal.

Queen Victoria, on her last trip to Italy, visited a church at Assisi, where she met a very devout monk, who es-corted her through a chilly corridor. His head was shaven, and she asked him it the did not feel the draughts, wearing the tonsure in the way his order did. His reply was not in Italian, as she expected, but in perfect English, tinctured with Celtic brogue: "No, madame, I don't suffer at all in that way. You know we kind know, we Irish are a hot-headed race!

The long-suffering disposition of the London Bobby is well known. Once up-on a time, however, an old lady button-holed one of these obliging officers of the law and proceeded to put to him the law and proceeded to put to him a string of questions compared with which the Shorter Catechism simply did not amount to a circumstance. Finally, having exhausted her stock of queries, she asked: "Why do you wear that funny sort of strap under your chin, constable?" "That, madam," he replied, gravely, "is to rest our jaws when they get tired of answering silly questions."

Howard Paul says that on one occasion William J. Florence, at the end of a not very prosperous engagement in San Francisco, announced a benefit for himself and his wife. The late John W. Mackay happened to be in town at the time, and wrote to Florence for one orchestra seat. It was duly sent, as a matter of course, and Mrs. Florence remarkers are true of the sent seat. chestra seat. It was duly sent, as a matter of course, and Mrs. Florence remarked to her husband that, considering the friendship existing between the two men, she thought Mr. Mackay might have taken a private box at least. "Wait," said Florence, "he has not paid yet, and I am in no hurry." The benefit took place, Mr. Mackay came from Virginia City to occupy the seat he had taken, and a day later he sent Florence a cheque for $1,000.

A woman was charged the other day in Paris with shoplifting, to which she indignantly pleaded not guilty, her contention being that it was a case of mistaken identity. But the judge, who was a wily old gentleman, addressed her as follows: "I understand, madam, that you contend that the detective is altogether wrong in thinking that you are gether wrong in thinking that you are the lady who attempted to remove a variety of articles under cover of a cape? And yet the description which is given of her exactly corresponds with you. (Reading): 'A young lady, tall, atrik-ing, and remarkably handsome, lustrous eyes. a perfect figure swall fact and eyes, a perfect figure, small feet and hands, exquisitely dressed—" "Stop, Monsieur le Juge," exclaimed the young lady, with a far-away look in her eyes, "I plead guilty." "Ah!" said the judge.

Talleyrand used to excuse his marriage with a woman so lacking in tact and sense on the ground that clever women might compromise their huslands, whereas stupid women only compromised themselves. One day Denon, the famous Egyptologist, dired with the Talleyrands. M. Talleyrand instructed his wife to read Denon's books. She duffully worst to be leave in the line with th his wife to read Denon's books. She dutifully went to the Lorary, but on the way forgot the name. She could only remember she wanted the book of a famous traveler whose name ended in "on." The librarian gave her "Robinson Crusoe." Mme. Talleyrand read the book, marveling that a great traveler could write such an interesting work. At dinner she astonished her greests by suddenly exclaiming: "Mon Dieu, monsieur, what joy you must have felt on your island when you found Friday!"

The historian Freeman had always been a very regular attendant at church services, and knew almost all the Psalms by heart. Sometimes, according to Pro-fessor William Clark, he gave evidence fessor William Clark, he gave evidence of this knowledge in a manner savoring slightly of irreverence. Writing of Dean Alford in the "Saturday Review," to which he was a frequent contributor, he made a reference to the copiousness of the dean's contributions to the periodical literature of the day. Dean Alford, he said, seemed incapable of abstaining even for a single month, so that, he said, if ever a month passed by without his appearing in the "Contemporary Review" or the "Sunday Magazine" or some similar publication, we can imagine his taking up the language of the Psalmist, and saying: "I kept silence, yea, even from Good Words, but it was pain and grief unto me."
