TWJ

Pablished by permission of Burns, Oates Washbourne, London, England. HONOUR WITHOUT

RENOWN

BY MRS. INNES BROWN Author of "Three Daughters of the United

Kingdom ' CHAPTER XXII-CONTINUED

When Father Basil rose from his knees it was with the dew of a sweet submission filling his heart, and strongly resolved to endure without murmur the decrees of Heaven. His eyes were dry, he spoke little; but Ma Sceir read his heart aright, and knew what he was suffering.

Dr. Arno wandered restlessly in and out of the room. Inwardly he was exceedingly distressed, outward ly he was annoyed and irritable. He had not succeeded in his charitable efforts to rescue Manired and his brave deliverer without suffering on his own part. His usually ruddy face was scorched and burnt, and his hands caused him considerable pain ; but to do the kind man justice, it was not so much his own suffarings which distrassed and annoyed him as to solve it the better. Indeed, I those of the poor little nun before begin to think that an innocent man him.

him. "Well, Father," he inquired in a graff, turly tone, "how did you find I believe that my sister here has by that miserable Englishman—the cause of sel our trouble? Just as the fact, for the sick Englishman though there were not enough sorrow and grief to weep over at times like If so, I can now understand why she these! Did you make anything out these! Did you make any same as sullen him. Can you oblige me with the of the creature, or was he as ever?" name of some notary who would and uncommunicative as ever?" name of some notary who would kindly accompany me?" "That I will, right gladly," replied interested even in spite and trnd rly one of the injurid little the doctor, interested even in spite of his dislike to Manfred. "Take hands, now enveloped in cotton wool, he continued, with tears in his this card "-across which he hastily eyes This is one of the very saddest things I have ever known ; and yet I have watched weak, innocent babas suffer and die, and seen strong men fall at their posts. But this onephysically so sensitive and delicatehad the bravest, most unselfish heart I have ever known ; aed to think that a precious life like hers should be sacrificed for that useless, stupid countryman of yours! Bah! it unmans me when I think of it. it Surely she has friends in your cold hearted country who will mourn her death ?'

But she is not dead yet!" interrupted her brother hastily. Nor is she in danger of it, surely ?"

"No"-testily-"but except for me she might have been. I tell you both, that had you seen what I grave tenderness and anxiety, witnessed it would have wrung your towards the unconscious sufferer, hearts with such pity and admiration that to your dying day you would then whispering carnestly his last instructions to Ma Scear, seized his never have forgotten it. I myself caught but a glimpse of her now and hat and left the Convent. again as, driven by the wind the fiarce tongues of fira were lifted upwards, sideways, and seemingly inwards upon her, while she knelt upon the threshold, her brave form such days," he meditated, as he stepped into the open street. "The enveloped and framed as with a time has flown so rapidly canopy of purgatorial flames, and striving to force before her to a place of safety that heavy burden of helpless humanity. I saw her sensitive body shrink, in natural it." dread and terror, from the cruel dimes; but I saw also the weak frame, compelled by her noble spirit. do its part. When at last the opportunity off sred, and the unconscious burden safely reached me, I saw her fall with outstretched hands, as though overcome with exhaustion, pleading at last for help on her own Oh, Father !" said the old man, as he leant against the bed for shall come to you. Had it not all support, which shook with his sobe, broken upon me so suddonly and impatiently asked the doctor. "Can you understand her meaning?" "Hardly," responded her brother, as he rose slowly to his feet, astonished and bewildered by his sister's words. He stood with one him his honour and good name."

He knows all. Save poor Leadbitter!' Her mind suddenly became clouded again, and she spoke no more. Well, what does she say, Father ?"

Dr. Arno," he said solamnly meets the eye. There is a mystery somewhere, and the sooner I am able

CHAPTER XXIII

"it is impera

clasped

felon," he muttered ;

looking up suddenly, almost brightly, he stretched out his feeble arm towards Father Basil with a gesture of welcome, asking anxiously after Sister Marguerite. arm thrown across his chest support-"How is she, Father ? Do not tell me that she is dead !" he gasped, ing the other, the hand of which his brow, whilst his eyes when he received no immediate stared into vacancy. "Edmund Leadbitter, the supposed forger or reply. "She is not well enough to come once the friend of my brother, who, by the way, always and visit you herself," he answered guardedly; " but she has great confi. swore he was unjustly condemned. Is it possible that this strange dence in your honor, and bade us hasten to your side in order to note Englishman can prove poor Lead bitter's innocence? If so, even as my sister bids me, I must hasten to Yes, Father de Woodville, I his side at once, and leave no ston reached the ruined house.

unturned to aid him and restore to both of you, so that you may hear and understand all that I have to tive that I return to the sick man at once. There is more in this than tell. My name is Harold Manfred." "Good heavens !' broke in Father Basil, in astonishment, as he gazed in wonder upon the wreck of humann to think that an innocent man ity before him ; " are you, then, poor been condemned and made to Leadbitter's half brother ?" adbitter's half brother ?" "Why, here you are !" he ex-"Yes, I am he! I am also the claimed ; "what a hunt I have had accomplice of a scoundrel, who him into a felon's cell." Manfred continued his tale in as seems to hold the key of the secret. firm a tone as he could command, whilst the notary took down his depositions. Never seeking to justify used such strenuous efforts to save conduct. or excnerate his own conduct, Manfred summoned all remaining strength of mind and body, and con tinned to unfold the whole of his base story, the main facts of which he had already related to Sister Marguerite. Having concluded, he wrote something in pencil-" and call at the address which I have given you. You will find Monsieur Camard not only a very able and heaved a deep sigh and exclaimed : There ! Make any use of this that you think fit : but I feel happier now than I have done since I was a little clever practitioner, but a man who understands and speaks your lan child. Only tell me speedily what course you purpose to pursue toward gnaga like a native : moreover, his hears is in the right place. Au revoir my brother?" "It will be a matter of time," Father. Make all possible speed, for I fear there is but little time to replied Moneieur Camard thought. lose." Father Basil' needed not a second fully. But I have sworn to you that he bidding. The words of his sister had is absolutely innocent. Thomas also swore on his death bed, and attested stirred a strange chord in his heart.

He fels instinctively that she had the feel in writing, that he himself done her utmost-perhaps had given tampered and altered the cheque, done her utmost-perhaps had given tampered and altered the cheque, even her life-that wrong might be though at the time I knew it not." righted, and it remained for him now We believe you fully; but even so, his country, by whom he has judged and condemned, must equally to pick up the tangled threads and complete her task. Turning, he be persuaded of his innocence.' cast one fond look, fraught with

Ob, Edmund ! and you have already waited so long ! Promise me, on your worl of honor," he implored in a trembling voice, addressing Monsieur Camard, "that you will hasten to your utmost the moment of his release, and never rest until it is accomplished." "It is well that life holds not many "I do promise. It is a service that accords well with my inclination.]

think it possible that even now it that I may be useful to send a telegram to know not even what hour of the day the Governor of the prison, urging it is. Stay! that is surely the him to treat him with greater care Angelus bell. Poor Paris, I marval and leniency than usual, while this there is a soul left mindful to ring confession is submitted to the Home Secretary.' Presently he drew forth the card "It shall be done," cried Father which Dr. Arno had given him and scanned the address. It isd him in Basil joyfully, "for I will send it in my own name of de Woodville, the very opposite direction to that in which may carry some weight. But where is Mrs. Leadbitter, the poor which Manfred lay. If only a figere would pass that he might hail it and young bride of two days, who was so thus hasten his journey-for he was cruelly divided from her husband ?" not very sure of his bearings.

'Tell Marie and Madge I want Manfred cast a look of incredulity them.' Yes, dear little sufferer, they at the priest as he answered slowly Do you mean to imply, Father de Woodville, that you are not aware it is barely three months since I unexpectedly, I should have thought where Lady Leadbitter resides ? Her buried my only daughter; and in of summoning them sooner. Thank husband is a baronet, remember !" No indeed : I have not the very lengthened by a day or two, thus table. preventing an unpleasant meeting Phil one was almost as anxious and interested as the other by the time they under his own roof. As I was a friend of Sir Hugh Lonsdale and his Manfred was lying awake and perown guest, it might have been a little awkward. However, having made that discovery in the Western Lodge, I feigned illness, and quisted fectly conscious as the two men entered the room, Looking up the place as speedily as possible." "It is altogether marvellous," pon dered the pricet, "and yet it is cred-Nevertheless, it still remains a tble. fact that Lady de Woodville has not happy days of boyhood, when he was the slightest idea as to the identity of her quiet lodgekeeper. Only so late litheness and strength in his hard as February last we discussed the young body. It was only after a matter together, wondering who on year in the gay society set of New carth she could be." York that the curious, intent look, You will find that I am right."

THE CATHOLIC RECORD

down in the public interest all you sighed Manfred wearily, for he was often possessed his beautiful dark suffering intensely. The terrible exsuffering intensely. The terrible ex-citement of narrating his own dis-depths of which dawned little specks understand very clearly what you graceful history had entailed an of light. He was biginning to feel means; and, God helping me, I will almost superhuman effort, and now the urge, the goad, of his career-the reaction was fast setting in. only he wouldn't have called it by graceful history had entailed an of light. He was biginning to the reaction was fast setting in. only he wouldn't have called it by Both men were startled by the pain. any such name. The young men ful pallor which was stealing over and girls of his set seemed never to gratitude the advent of busy, florid glitter of the bright ard lights strang Dr. Arno as, panting with subdued along Broadway like gleaming much as for want of curiosity 8.8 breath, he burst open the door.

for you !' Then, observing quickly worked his ruin and ultimately cast the ghastly look upon the sick man's face, he said : "Is everything con cluded satisfactorily? He is bad

He is bad. and probably will not last long." "His signature to these papers is necessary," observed Monsiour Cam ard seriously. "Will you be good enough to sign these valuable docu ments for us, Mr. Manfred ?"

With all my heart, and would that I could assist in any other way to undo all the wrong I have done. Supported in the arms of Father easil, Manfred sat up and feebly Basil, renned his name. The letters grew firmer as he wrote, adding a or two of bitter condemnation of his own conduct and of contrite sorrew for the base part he had played. he You will show it to her, pleaded, as white and exhausted, he sank back upon the pillow. I will tell her how nobly you have behaved, how trathfully you the fine art of personal service, of have acted, and how patiently and giving onesslt to others, of not uncomplainingly you have borne your sufferings. Now, doctor, do see if you cannot afford him some counting the cost of sacrifice. Praying that he might direct the strong relief."

No, no ! It is my foot that has caused me such intelerable pain. You can do nothing for it now, doctor. It will kill me, I know, and I do not seam to care how soon. Bat you will tell ber, Father Da Woodgood is all that counts." ville, how faithfully I kept my vow, how very contrite I was at the end. and that with my dying breath 1 blessed God for the lessons of true eyes, but the man went on : Christian virtue that through her

He had taught me ?" ndesd, I will tell her every ng." And Father Basil seated thing." himself close to the sick man, and taking a firm grip of his hand, con tinusd : "I promise you faithfully that she shall know all - how brave, trathful, and p it ent you have been and will she not thank God for it ! "I know it, and she will pray for me too, if that can avail me any.

thing.' "Are you speaking of Sister Marguerise ?" interposed the doctor, as he paused in dressing Manfred's foot ; "for I came to tell you that she seemed easier, and has fallen into a into the House of Happiness. natural sleep.

TO BE CONTINUED

TORCH LIGHT

truly when he said that the notary appears now that it was for unate experience had taught her the tones, which troubled somewhat, for had his heart in the right place ; and his stay in Ireland was unavoidably advantages of a cheerful breakfast visions of rant being raised floated through his mind. "Tomor maybe I bring you hees name. Philip Benton Brice wastwenty four. He was born with a golden teaspoon wife she has it on a leetle bit of in his baby mouth, and before he paper. Hees vera rich man. pay our rent to him." No more was said, but the question was ten he knew that the Brice family tree, as well as the family was still in Torrelli's beautitul, soft eyes as Philip stood on the dark and fortune, was in a highly flourishing condition. His mother and aunts narrow landing. His own eyes looked extraordinarily like very cold quite often reminded him of his responsibility as a member of that pristocratic family. Responsibility water, so hard and glittering didn't mean much to him in those steely were they in the hall light. With the poignancy of a poiso acquiring on the college campus arrow came the realization that the incomes of many rich men cam from sources such as these, and that the silken garments and costly fare and shimmering pearls that decked afterward habitual and conspicuous. the beautiful iridescent butterflie fluttering about the flame of Broad way and made it brighter with their burning, were bought with wasted, stunted, ugly lives of the feel Feeling along the panel of the nearset sagging door, Philip turned the handle and entered the room his features, and they welcomed with have enough of the glamor and that was to be home to him for the nex) six months. It was low and along Broadway like gleaming diamonds about the slim throat of a dingy. Through the broken panes of the window the shy sunlight lovely woman. The excesses of the life of pleasure sickened Philip. The could ever go back to that lazy, unrouged lips, the stenciled eyelash, thinking life after he had seen such the practiced smile, the boldness of glimpses of the other side as this. youth, caused a revulsion in his As a starved man wants food, so he wanted to lift the weight from these heart. He longed to get away from it all, to do something worth while. poor people who had from the first to help make the world a little better been kept down until they were almost submerged. He could not get the thought of that hanging rail place just because he had lived. "Queer," you say? So said the from his mind. He arranged his young men who were drifting idly and without rudder down the stream things in order, and with the curious feeling of a man awakened from a long, dead sleep, began the life that to the "Port of Missing Men." So said the girls who, light and irrepressible as bubbles in champagne, could make no impression on Philip's Later, when they would meet him heart or his fortune. His old professor at college, who on the highways of the world, the truth would strike them that Philip had lived, whilst they had been satis knew the impulsive, lovable boy probably better than any one else, fied with merely watching life go by planted the tiny seed in Philip's soul that was later to bring forth the The details of his life will be another story. This is merely a little cross hundrad fold. He knew that Philip section about the broken ba desired to explore life without fear and the girl he met " down there.'

100C

and without resistance, as a child Strange to say, if it had not been hants for treasure in a strange room. for the broken banister he would not He was talking to him one day about have met the girl. Fate was weav ing the silken chains that were draw ing these two together, and a broken banister fitted quite admirably into the scheme.

forces of Philip's nature into worth. The next day was Sunday, and while channels, the old professor's Philip, on his way to Mass in the dark, cool chapel, stopped to pass eyes were filled with the yearning softness of deep sympathy as has speke to the boy : "Life isn't what the time of day with Torrelli. spoke to the boy : "Life isn't what you get, but what you bring to it. the middle of the animated one-sided conversation, Torrelli, with joy in What you have is nothing ; what you his eyes, looked past Pailip and do is only a little more ; just being called out a gay greeting. Philip turned to see the cause of all this A question, ardent and quick, flaw happiness, and a girl came quickly to Pailip's lips and leaped in his down the stairs. Now, Philip had alweys smiled at every child he met, 'It's entirely for you to determine and each answered him as if there what you become. Don't demand of were a secret freemascary between life something for nothing. A man them. So he smiled at this girl, and shall get only what he works for. she smiled, too, a very tiny smile, and passed on. When he entered The voice took on greater earnest-ness until it sounded clear and true the chapel a little form, vaguely like the notes on a silvery bugle. "All that matters, Philip, is that familiar, knelt in front of him. He saw the face, and then he knew. you hold the terch in your hand. 'i'll not let it go cut." 'I'll not let it go cut, sir," Philip was the girl, and she was beautiful. Her eyes were dark, and so was her hair : her complexion was made up declared from a full hears. of sun and air and a vary faint rose color. Her figure, in its simple blue They shook hands, and the door suit, was the slight yet rounded form closed as the boy left the room. Slowly opening, under his eager young hands, was the door leading of young womanhood. Little golden specks of sunshine came strolling through the stained glass windows and danced on her dress and on her The tired city lay in the languid hair. Philip's hungry eyes looked at embrace of summer, like a little ber. The girl must have read his fretful child seeking rest and com thoughts, for a flush crept into her fort and coolness in the hollow of cheeks and her lashes flattered. its mother's arm. The rich had gone to fashionable resorts by sea Semshow the day passed. On Monday Torrelli met Philip at fall upon the girl as she stood hesi tant at the top of the stairs. Philip carght his breath at the lovely picture she made. He knew then, in a sudden flash of vision, that his the girl. Looking at her, he thought of budding flowers, of spring skies flecked with little ivory clouds, and was youth, eterral youth, calling figure leaned against the broken banister. Then came a soft crunch. ing sound as the decrep't support of young sunlight on the trees father was right.

calling for its mate.

her in his arms.

He had met

The sligh

I

ices: Continental Life Building CORNER BAY AND RICHMOND STREETS TORONTO DAY, FERGUSON & CO. BARRISTERS ames E. Day ohn M. Ferguson oseph P. Walsh TORONTO, CANADA LUNNEY & LANNAN BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES Harry W. Lunney, B. A., B. C. L. Alphonsus Lannan, I.L. B. CALGARY, ALBERTA JOHN H. MCELDERRY BARRISTER, SOLICITOR NOTARY PUBLIC CONVEYANCER y to Loan Telephone 1083 HERALD BLDG. ROOM 24 GUELPH, ONT. ARCHITECTS

> WATT & BLACKWELL. Members Ontario Association ARCHITECTS Sixth Floor, Bank of Toronto Chambers LONDON, ONT. DENTISTS

DR. BRUCE E. EAID Room 5, Dominion Bank Chambers Cor. Richmond and Dundas Sts. Phone 566, EDUCATIONAL

Over 200 calls for office help since last January 1st. W. F. MARSHALL, Principal.

St. Jerome's College Founded 1864 KITCHENER, ONT.

cellent Business College Department. cellent High School or Academic Depart. Excellent College and Philosophical REV. W. A. BENINGER, C. R., President.

FUNERAL DIRECTORS

MURPHY & GUNN

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES

Solicitors for The Home Bank of Canade

Solicitors for the Roman Catholic

Episcopal Corporation

Suite 53, Bank of Toronto Chamber

FOY, KNOX & MONAHAN

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES, ETC.

Telephones { Main 461 Main 462

A. E. Knox E. L. Middleton Cable Address : "Foy Main 4 Main 4

' Tomorrow

and

the

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS

LONDON, CANADA Phone 170

T. Louis Monahan George Keogh

JULY 16 1921

dear face, and to hear her sweet sort ;" and he ras forward to meet it. faintest notion as to her whereabouts; voice calling to me from out the purgatorial flames. God help me, it was a trying ordeal." Fortunately it was unoccupied. "Drive as quickly as you can to the Rue St. L---- and call at the was a trying ordeal."

said Father Basil, first telegraph office that you pass by Doctor,' coming forward and placing his the way," he cried as he sprang in. hand with a filial caress upon the He flung the door to, and sinking old man's shoulder, "may God bless upon the seat laid his hat baside you for ever for this generous act. I little knew that we owed all this to you. From henceforth the name of his startled and confused faculties. Dr. Arno shall be uttered with life-The nearer they drove to the city the more thronged he found the long gratitude and affection by her family. And deem us not all so base and unfeeling that we cannot unsettled streets. The panic and excitement of the previous night had value at its proper worth what you left obvious and terrible traces. Twelve hours ago, all around had have done today.

"Nay, Father," protested the ctor, "Heaven knows I seek no been a frightful scene of carnage and excitement. Father Basil was too doctor. preoccupied with his own thoughts thanks for aught I have done for her. Bear with an old man who has seen to pay much attention to what was the roughest and worst side of life it or had been passing. His patience hs breaks down at the sight of such was almost exhausted as he realized courage and devotion. Parhaps the how impossible is was for the lumundue exsitement, or the privilege of bering vehicle, with its worn out, being able to rescue her, has unnerved me. It only I dared has jaded steed, to make speedy progress. Frequently their course was interexamine the internal injury she has sustained from the falling debris, I sheuld feel much more satisfied; but, rupted by the necessity of turning tered barricades, beside which lay at present, she cannot endure to be moved or even touched, and I must frequently the bodies of dead Communists deserted by their comrades. wait as patiently as possible until she regains a little strength. Poor It was, therefore, no small relief to See, she moves! Speak to him when the facre at last drew up child her, Father. There is a chance that at a post-office. He could at least parkrait of my brother as I had seen the may be just conscious enough to despatch telegrams to his brother him last. You still doubt, Father? understand you." Father Basil knelt down by the and Lady O'Hegan. He had no time to be delicate in his wording of them; they were brief, but to the bedside and bent over her saying : "I-yeur brother Percy-am closs beside you, Bertie. Speak, dear, and point. He found the notary just about to enter his private carriage and drive tell me if there is anything you wish for.

towards the very quarter in which Manfred lay. Father Basil accosted A faint, sweet smile broke over her him eagerly, presenting to him Dr. Arno's card. The notary at once face, as though the understood his words and their meaning was very sweet to har. Then the flashed brow offered the priest a seat in his own contracted as though perplexed by painful thought and memories, and carriage and listened with grave and painful thought and memories, and kind interest to his shory as they in short, uneven gasps she strove to drove along the boulevards. Father Basil's hopes and spirits rese as the speak.

.

Tell Marie and Madge I want invigorating breeze fanned his burnthem. . . . Poor Edmund Lead Saak the English. bitter He will confess. man. .

nor yet to my knowledge have I ever seen or heard of her." "Then' -- ztill incredulously--"your think, you, that lives in such close scolasion at the Western Lodge at signal check-very occasional-in aron Court ? "I cannot tell you who she is ; but charity. The biblical injanction Baron Court ?

some one I believe of the name of-Mac something." "Just so: MacDermont! That was her maiden name ; her married name is Leadbitter-Edmund's wife, Lady Leadbitter !" Impossible !" urged Father Basil, unheard of. His father and mother were dis How do you know 18 ?" "How do I know ?" reiterated Manfred vehemently. "Because last autumn I was for a day and two nights a guest at Baron Court. It cussing this much beloved son one autumn I was for a day and two nights a guest at Baron Court. It was the shooting season, and I went as the friend of Sir Hugh Londsale. to live for six months in one of the to live of the solway and in the solution of the poorest sections of New York, so that Daring that short stay we had cocasion to seek shelter from the he might see at first hand the povwhilst so doing (I blush to relate it,) of the animated conversation.

How do you know it ?"

knowing that the owner was out, I "Philip was alway prisd into her inner and private his mother, sighing. 'Philip was always queer," said She was think. apariment and discovered-to my surprise and horror-a large painted quite content to take positions in their father's bank and who didn's bother themselves at all about the Indeed, you need not ; for two of his paintings, initialed by his own poor. "I guess he will get all sorte of germs in that filthy place. You hand, hung upon the wall ; and his know the poor have them to spare.' old 'Strad' bearing his name in full, rested near his portrait. If you doubt me still, go and inquire of old three children in a germ press-and very often joy proof-nameary, and like to get my hands on the man John Ryder, the coachman." "But how can this bs?" intertherefore fels quite competent to rupted Father Basil. You, Harold Manfred—the very man who was discuss that aspect of the cass. Her husband didn't answer her; enjoying the property wrested, as my brather thought, so unjustly from important. At last he speke : Ha'll probably marry some queer girl down Little Italy. there. That's par) of the uplift The door of one of the rooms that Philip noticed a slight pricking of his hand. On open Edmund Leadbitter, a guest beneath De Woodville's roof! Pray how did business."

he receive you ?' You see I was never aware, until Mrs. Brice nodded wisely. She fruit-stand at the corper, came out. ing brow: for they were rushing now you yourself informed me, that my was not as competent a judge in this "Who owns this place?' demanded forgotten in all the excitement. A with all possible speed to the sick brother and yours had been matter as in that of germs, having man's side. Dr. Arno had spoken on such terms of intimacy. It less knowledge of love, but years of said Torrelli, in his broken, musical whose carelessness had caused all the

By Nancy Buckley in The Missionary Philip Brice was queer; no ques. Is and nonntain. The poor, as the foot of the stairs. I got the usual, panted and wilted and diad tion about it. In the epinion of his under the cruel sur. Far away in friends he would be a mighty fize California, at a fashionable hotel, fellow it he didn't have these foolisk the Brice family way making its susser-in-law, Lady de Woodville, has contrived to keep her secret more securely then I deemed it possible for any women to do 1. Who is it scourely than I deemed it possible thing. You see, in Paillo's would a tried in vain to have him join them. for any women to do ! Who is it, rich man left such things to his "I've made my decision, mothar, secretary, who would send an occaand there's no time like the present for putting it to the test.

You'll soon get tired of it." " Maybe so, but at least I'm doing about giving in secret was not heeded. Not only did the right promise you.

Don't let it go cut."

my best." The beautifally clear dark eyes. which could so easily fill with laugh-ter, reflected the eagerness of his know what the left gave, but both came together to applaud. As for going among the poor, as Philip did, young soul. Suddenly his mother drew him to her. "Philip, my con," she said softly, and kissed him. For and living, or rather existing, with them in a little room in an impossia brief dazzling second her eyes ble neighborhcod, it was a thing broke their way into Pailip's heart. The two parted. Philip went to his room, packed his bag, put on his oldest suis, took the subway and in half an hour found himself in Little as Italians, swarmed in the flimsy tene ments and on the narrow, ill small.

ing streets. Philip had chosen the Mingled with his fear, his anxiety "Alley" as being about the most his how anger at the accident, there dilapidated place in the section. was a thrill of joy in the closeness of After going through a dark, narrow her body. He samied her to Torrelli's ing of her other sons, who had been tunnel he came on the small paved room and laid her on the coush. court of a back tenement. He looked a little downcast as he picked Hardly had he hung up the receiver when the ambulance was clanging its way down the narrow street. Meanwhile Philip had made up his his way between the heaps of gar-"I guess he will get all sorts bage and the awful litter of the place. Then up a rickety pair of mind that no public hospital should shelter the girl. His own home wa wooden stairs whose railing was a Mrs. Brice spoke as one having greasy, worn piece of wood held by knowledge. She had brought up her only two or three rusty nails. Philip greasy, worn piece of wood held by the proper place. When he rang the only two or three rusty nails. Philip bell, the old servant who had been examined it. "This is a crime. I'd left in charge answered it, and her like to get my hands on the man eyes grew wile with wonder as her who owns this place. That crazy young master, with the uncenscious barden in his arms, went up to his banister is going to break very soon, and someone will be killed." Philip mother's room. It was only after he was thinking of something more had not yet realized that a life more several hours, when the light had or less did not matter very much in come sgain to the lovely dark eyes, opened and Torralli, who ran the in the palm of his hand. On open ing it he found the crushed paper. "Who owns this place ?' demanded forgotten in all the excitement. A handing him a square of dirty paper 'All right," said Philip, and he looksd to read the poorly written name. He dida't have time, for again the soft closing of the door made both men look up. All the light in that dark landing seemed to

> GORDON MILLS Habit Materials and Veilings SPECIALLY PRODUCED FOR THE USE OF

RELIGIOUS COMMUNITIES BLACK, WHITE, AND COLOURED SERGES and CLOTHS. VEILINGS

CASHMERES, ETC.

ocked in a large variety of widths and qualit Samples forwarded on applicat

LOUIS SANDY rdon Mills, STAFFORD, ENGLAND Telegrams - Luisandi, Stafford. 'Phone No. 104

Order by Phone - we Deliver

