From Abraham's plains of glory, To Lundy's field of blood, O'er many a theme of story By provid Ontario's flood; On plains all stained with battle, By altars rich with prayer, The sounds of conflicts rattle,

From mountains aged and hoary, From plains of beauty rare, Behold, advance with glery, The Sons of Temperance fair ; Their meaning, oh ! how gladly The reeling drunkard hears, And woman's thanks, all sadly,

But yet no sword is there.

Advance ! advance, with gladness, Nor pause while yet remains A victim in his madness, A wretch bound down in chains ; Till Eve's forsaken daughter, The captive now, is free, Nor blood is there, nor slaughter,

But all is liberty.

Burst out with glittering tears.

Then from each sparkling fountain Burst forth the theme of praise, And every snow-clad mountain Re-echo back the lays. Like spray by tempest scatter'd Old Bacchus' strength is gone; His gilded cup lies shatter'd, And still the cry is-On!
