Practically all of the trades people of Denver were ferced to stay down town last night and were on hand at the opening of the business day, but there were few shoppers. Schools were as desolate as in midsummer.

Snow continued falling this moraing and with overcast sky it seemed that little abatement of the storm could be hoped for during the day. Labor Leader Says Hearts of Towns from the central and southern portions of Colorado reported a continuation of one of the worst snow storms in the history of the state, and what was true of traffic and business conditions in Denver was true of nearly every large town in the state.
