

SHOE BIRDS.

This poem, by Louis Honoré Fréchette, the laureate of Canada, is very fine in the original, and holds the same position in French-Canadian literature that Bryant's "Thanatopsis" occupies in American literature.

When the rude Equinox, with his cold train From our horizon drives accustomed cheer, Behold! a host of winged spirits appear.

And flutter briskly round the frosty plain. No needs are anywhere, save slowly rain. No leafage thick against the outlook clear.

Rough winds do wildly whip them far and near; God's heart alone to feed their every pain. Dear little travellers through this icy rain.

Fear not, the tempest shall not you over-wield; The glad spring buds within your happy wing.

Go wild about the swatches, and be O birds of snow, unarm'd, and so teach me.

Whom God doth guard stronger than the strong. —G. G. B., in the Chicago Record.

Problem of Long Life. What to eat and how to live form a study which should have its own university, from which graduates should emerge to rival preachers and physicians as the preventive agencies, in the latter as in human welfare and the amelioration of disease and sin.

The Welsh bicyclist, Michael, who is credited with being the fastest bicyclist in the world, gives an interesting account of his sensations while pedalling. For a few miles he can bear his trainer call off his time and give advice, which he is able to take, but at the end of ten miles the course becomes fairly stark rushing beneath my feet, and all the time and the rush of air sounds like a dull roar from afar.

The light of day changes to the dulness of evening, and the twang of the spokes cutting, and at twenty miles the only sound that comes to me is the low purr of the rushing wheels. At twenty-five miles I have lost all sense of hearing, and I am absolutely motionless in my limbo, but I am literally flying through the air.

We grow so easily as to forget our noblest and most splendid faculty. It seems to me there is no mania for a noble life like this: Count always your highest moments your truest moments. Believe that in the time when you were the greatest and most spiritual man, then you were your truest self.—Phillip Mason.

The greatest battles of life are fought in the arena of a man's own heart. His most powerful and his most hideous foes are within himself. The household of his daily thought and desires and purposes and imaginations contains enemies subtle and strong. In his own bosom the battle must be joined.—Phillip Mason.

His First Chance. A young man had just joined the church. He was in the very best glow of religious elation, and eager to do something definite and important to prove himself worthy of the Christian name.

One day, in stress of temptation, he was overcome by his old appetite. He remained under its debasing influence for about a week. Then he went in great trouble to a friend and said: "What shall I do?"

"Do?" said the other. "There is but one thing to do. Go to the prayer-meeting. Take your usual seat, rise at the usual time and tell the whole story. Ask the pardon of God and of the church. Do this, if you are sorry. If you are not sorry, stay away."

The poor fellow went, and did as he had been advised. Tremblingly he told of his temptation and of his fall. With tears he offered his confession, and asked that the petitions of God's people might be offered for Divine help, that he might never again be overcome by temptation; but not a word of encouraging response or a prayer in his behalf was offered by any of the members.

The meeting ended. The people filed out past him on their way from the church. Not one of them approached him. It seems incredible—but this is no fiction. They who had vowed to cherish and help the penitent and the fallen went out and left their erring brother standing alone in his shame in the House of God.

"It can't be true. He must be a hypocrite," said one to another, as an excuse for this neglect. "It is no use to coddle such men. They are a disgrace to the parish," said a third.

The young church-member passed out with the rest. Some feeling of sympathy agitated his heart. He watched the retreating figure of the abashed and humiliated man as he slunk away from the church with bowed head. The sight troubled him. He went home, but could not stay. He wandered out again, and his anxiety led him to the drunkard's house.

He hardly dared to knock at the door. He grew hot and cold, wondering what he ought to do. At last, he thought he heard a woman weeping within, and summoning all his courage he rang the bell, and then wished himself a thousand miles away. He had never spoken to the man in his life, and he thought that probably his intrusion would be considered impertinent.

The wife admitted him, weeping. "Oh," she said, "help me! Maybe you've come in time to step it. John is going away. He's packing up. He's going for good! He's leaving me and the children! He'll never come back! He says he'll never set foot in this town again. He's so ashamed for what he has done, and the way they've treated him. He never can hold up his head again! Oh! can't you plead with him, and prevent him from going?"

"The young man forgot his timidity. 'I will try,' he said. He went into the room with the discouraged penitent and shut the door. The sound of pleading—then of prayer—came through the partition to the wife's eager ears. An hour later the visitor came out. Behind him walked a man whose head was erect.

"Well, Jennie," he said, "seems I've got one friend left in this place. As long as he sticks I'll try to stick, too."

Hope and determination were stirred. Another attempt for permanent reform would now be made. The usefulness of the young Christian, in doing what others did not do, had accomplished this. The man was saved to his family. His soul had been strengthened in its fight with evil. Such consecrated work by every Christian would win supreme honor to Christianity and hasten the universal reign of Christ in the hearts and lives of men.—Northern Messenger.

Shoes for Show.

Made to look well in a window—made for anything but comfort. Such are the kind that please your eyes at the expense of your feet. The shoe which does not fit your foot the first time you wear it promises little comfort for the twentieth time. It costs more money to secure the foot-fitting last of the Slater Shoe than for some entire shoe stocks. That's why they possess more foot comfort, wear, and appearance, than other shoes.
