THAT WICKED COMMISSION

When Commissioners Courtney Frebe and Bazin, three liberals. handed in their statement of the character of the Marine D partment Mr Brodeur opened the attack upon them. This minister was not estisfied until he had appointed another commissioner to investigate the first commission. Unfortunately Commissioner Cassels has discovered several scandals that the other men missed. He in turn is in danger of ministerial wrath.

McGinn, Woodstock, Ont.

Hood's Sarsaparilla will rid you of it, radically and per manently, as it has rid thousands.

Meanwhile Sir Fred. Borden. whose department also was condemned by the emmissioners, has taken his turn to assail his judges. For nearly three hours, on Thursday night, he berated Mesers. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin with epithets and phrases of contempt.

Here are a few geme: AN ANGRY KNIGHT. "The Commissioners approached their task with their minds made up and not with a desire of learn-

THE PRESENT SITUATION. Lust year Sir Wilfrid went to the Imperial Conference. He waited till the very end of the meetings, and on the last day, or the next one to it, brought in a resolution. This he introduced in a three minutes' speech, containing no explanation, in this address the Premier seems o have pronounced bimself the inventor of the whole scheme Red Line name and all. An Australian statesman rather snubbed him of the spot by saying that they had been talking about it for ten years and calling it by that same. The New Zsaland delegates wanted something faster than Canada proposed and would pay for nothing else. British Miristers in the conference protested that they had no notice of the resolutions, no chance to study the scheme as now present. ed, and said they could not fairly be asked to commit themselves to the programme. So the resolution was cut down to the bald statement now produced, which mentions no sum of money, fixes no proportion for
