the best method. We hope it will be tried at all events and have no doubt as to the beneficial results.

Hay when stacked or stored under cover should be treated to a sprinking of salt. If the hay is elightly on the green side this will to a great extent prevent heating, and besides it keeps the hay sweet. A few handfulls sprinkled over each load as atored is sufficient. By adopting this rule hay can be cut, in hot weather, in the morning, raked ap and cocked in the afternoon and put in the following day. It cures better in the cock and does not get scorched to a crisp until the very easure is taken out of it, it might therefore in very hot weather, with benefit, be cocked in the afternoon when cut that morning.
