Ladies of Culture and Refinement Use Salvia Hair Tonic. It Makes the Hair Beautiful.

At last a remedy has been discovered that will positively destroy this pest.

That Dandruff is caused by germs is accepted by every sensible person. Dandruff is the root of all hair evils.

SALVIA will kill the dandruff germs and remove Dandruff in ten days or money back.

McMurdo & Co. guarantees it. It will grow hair, stop itching scalp, falling hair, and make the hair thick and abundant. It prevents hair from turning gray, and adds life and lustre.

SALVIA is a hair dressing that has become the favorite with women of taste and culture, who know the social value of beautiful hair. A large, generous bottle costs only 50c. at leading druggists everywhere, and in St. John's by McMurdo & Co.

The word "SALVIA" (Latin for sage) is on every bottle. Refuse all substitutes.

The Late Mr. Payn.

And the Government Savings Bank.

At a meeting of the Governors and Directors of the Newfoundland Savings Bank, held on the 4th day of July, A.D. 1910, it was—

Resolved that the Governors and Directors desire to place on record their high appreciation of the valuable services rendered to the Bank by its late Cashier, Mr. William Bertram Payn, during the short tenure of his office of Cashier. From the time Mr. Payn assumed control of the internal affairs of the Bank he applied himself to the business of acquiring a complete knowledge of the details of its management, of its resources, and of its investments; and he exercised continually such competent supervision of its working as earned the warmest approbation of the Directors and confirmed the just opinion of the public in the strength, stability and efficiency of the institution. Mr. Payn's sudden and lamented death removes from the employment of the public an official whose whole record redounds to his own credit and to that of the service to which he belonged. The Governors and Directors further desire to communicate to the family of Mr. Payn their earnest sympathy with them in the affliction which has bereaved them, and at the same time to bear public testimony to the worth of the late Cashier of the Bank.

It is therefore Resolved that the Governors and Directors express to the family of Mr. Payn their unaffected sympathy with them in their loss and their high estimation of the value of the services which Mr. Payn rendered to the Bank and to the public.

And it is Further Resolved that these Resolutions be entered of record upon the Minutes of the Bank and communicated to the public.

St. Bon's Annual.

The "old boys" of St. Bonaventure's College intend to celebrate their anniversary in a rather interesting manner this year. The programme will consist of Mass and Benediction in the College Chapel, an informal breakfast in the refectory and an address on some interesting topic. An uncommon feature will be that the various items will be solely in the hands of ex-students. Mass will be celebrated by the Rev. Dean Born, one of the very first students of the College. Benediction will be given by another prominent clerical ex-student, while the servers at Mass as well as those at Benediction will be old boys, who have attained prominence in professional and commercial circles in their native land. The "O Salutaris" and "Tantum Ergo" will be sung by the congregation, led by ex-student members of the different choirs, while still another will preside at the organ. The breakfast will be informal and short, so that members may go right to work afterwards. The address will be delivered by Very Rev. Mons. Roche, Administrator of the Diocese, who will preside in the absence of His Grace the Archbishop, who is Patron of the Association, and its most illustrious as well as one of its most active members. The programme bearing the College seal and tied with the College colors will be a most interesting souvenir of the event.

The sch. Damaraland arrived at Bahia yesterday. Capt. Dawe called that all was well.

THE FAIR IMPOSTOR.

CHAPTER IX.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

But she knew how to avoid an anti-climax and, with a smile, took the duke's proffered arm.

'Come and rest,' said the duke, a tall, stately, old man, with a mass of white hair clustering about his high forehead. 'You have acquitted yourself very well, Miss Woodleigh; we shall soon find you entering the lists for the championship.'

Then, as they were about to turn away, he paused, and motioning to the lawn, dotted over by the players at their various courts, he said:

'How fashions change! At garden parties, when I was a young man, a great many years ago, my dear, we walked about in high-heeled boots and light blue coats with brass buttons. Now it is white flannel and India rubber shoes! And what is the result! Look at that young fellow there who has just hit the ball—a perfect Hercules in strength and an Apollo Belvedere in grace! We weren't a bad set, but not one of us could come up to that standard. Who is it, my dear?—I've left my glasses with the duchess.'

A faint blush rested for a moment upon her face.

'I think you mean Harold Woodleigh, my cousin,' she said, quietly.

'Ah, yes; I thought it was he. Splendid fellow!' said the duke, emphatically.

And, as he turned away, his eyes fell upon a small group at a little distance and coming down the path towards them. The centre of this group was the dean, and on his arm hung, as if for support, a boy of about seventeen.

He was as fair and delicate-looking as a girl, with long, light hair falling round his pale face almost to his shoulders.

As they came forward slowly, Lillian saw that he was slightly lame. But the exquisite beauty of the fair, girlish face, with its sensitive lips and dark violet eyes, chained her gaze upon it.

She was aroused by a heavy sigh from the duke, and looking up to ascertain the cause, saw his eyes fixed upon the boy with unspeakable sadness.

With an effort he turned to her.

'Here comes my nephew,' he said. 'I don't think you have met him yet. May I introduce him?'

Lillian inclined her head, and the duke, laying his hand on the thin, frail shoulder, said:

'My nephew, Gerald, Miss Woodleigh. Gerald, this is Sir Talbot's daughter.'

The young marquis looked up at the duke first, then turning the large, violet eyes on Lillian with that deep, concentrated gaze which one gets from the sick and suffering, and from them only. And as he looked, his eyes seemed to deepen with a slow but growing admiration that was almost reverential.

Without a word he drew his arm from the dean's, and held out a tiny, white hand.

Something in the mute greeting,

EVENING TELEGRAM FASHION PLATES.

The Home Dressmaker should keep a Catalogue Scrap Book of our Pattern Cuts. These will be found very useful to refer to from time to time.

8694. Ladies Waist with Lining and Tucker.

Pretty Waist Model.

Besides net, chiffon, cashmere and silk or a combination of materials are appropriate for this design. If made for evening wear, the yoke and sleeve portion below the band trimming may be omitted, or the sleeve may be full length and of transparent material. Embroidered net over chiffon with bands of silk or embroidery outlining the waist and tucked chiffon for yoke would be very effective. The pattern is cut in 6 sizes—32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 inches bust measure, and requires 1 3/4 yards of 36 inch material for the waist with 1 yard of 18 inch all-over for yoke and 1 yard of 32 inch material for the tucker for the 36 inch size.

of the lovely eyes and the thin, smooth, little hand went like a dart to Lillian's heart, and instead of loosening her hand, she held it in hers for a moment, only a moment longer than usual, but short as it was he noticed it and, looking up at the duke, said:

'Where are you going? Miss Woodleigh has been playing and wants to rest.'

The marquis turned his eyes on Lillian with sudden eagerness.

'May I sit here on this seat a little while with you?'

Lillian looked an assent, and the marquis, turning to the dean, said:

'I thank you, dean,' and looking up in Lillian's face with a faint flash of humble apology, said in a low, sweet voice:

'It is you who must give me your arm, Miss Woodleigh. You see I am but a poor cavalier.'

Lillian drew the white hand over her round, warm arm, and they went to the seat.

The duke stood as if in attendance for a moment, but Lord Vavasour, with a smile, said:

'Don't wait. Dean, tell my uncle about the new church,' and the duke and dean, raising their hats to Lillian, walked off.

The young marquis was the first to speak.

'It is very kind of you to stay with me,' he said, 'are you sure I am not keeping you from playing?'

'Quite sure,' said Lillian, looking down at the pale face with the violet eyes upturned in eager absorption. 'I have just been taking my first lesson in lawn tennis, and was glad of a rest. It must be a good game, for all games worth playing make me tired.'

'I dear say,' he said, and looking down, not querulously, but with most perfect resignation, he added, 'I cannot join at any game of that kind, but I can enjoy looking on,' he went on, quickly; 'isn't it a pretty scene?'

Then, before she could reply, he said:

'Are you Sir Talbot Woodleigh's daughter?'

The question, for all the soft, sweet voice in which it was put, was so abrupt that she, who had been looking absently at the gay scene, felt her heart leap with a sudden fear.

'Yes,' she said, after a slight pause.

'I thought I heard my uncle say

How to Slay the House Fly.

Do you think me rude and a "bumping" he said. 'Do not; I do not wish to be. I cannot play tennis, or cricket, or ride, or even walk without assistance, and I amuse myself by studying faces.' He paused.

'Well?' he said, encouragingly.

'Well,' he went on, drawing nearer, 'and I have studied them so long, all my short life, and I have learned, or think so, to read them as other people do books. No, not so, you think, you don't understand; let me explain, I don't pretend to read the character from the face; no, I do not think anyone can do that rightly; but I can tell when a person is weary, or weak, or hiding a heavy heart behind a smile, or when they have been ill or unhappy.'

She smiled down at him.

'I am almost sorry to say that for once you have been wrong,' she said, 'I have not been ill.'

Then he said, with a gentle firmness:

'You have been unhappy. There?'

He broke off with a swift look of penitent remorse. 'I have hurt you! Forgive me.'

The faint color that had fled from her face slowly crept back again, and with a little, soft laugh, she looked down at the remorseful face.

'You are right,' she said. 'But there is nothing wonderful in that; everybody is unhappy at some time of their lives. Do you think I am unhappy now?'

To be continued.

HOW TO SLAY THE HOUSE FLY.

Hon. Sidney Fisher Sends Out Circulars With Hints How to Keep Household Pests From Multiplying.

Ottawa, June 15.—Hon. Sidney Fisher is down on the house fly, and with the aid of official entomologists has started a crusade against that pest. A circular sent out from the Central Experiment Farm, Ottawa, tells how one should proceed when one spies a fly.

House flies, says this circular, are now recognized as most serious carriers of the germs of certain diseases, such as typhoid fever, tuberculosis, infantile diarrhoea, etc.

They infect themselves in filth and decaying substances, and by carrying the germs on their legs and bodies they pollute food, especially milk, with the germs of these and other diseases and of decay. No fly is free from germs.

Don't Let Them Breed.

House flies breed in decaying or decomposing vegetable and animal matter and excrement. They breed chiefly in stable refuse. In cities this should be stored in dark fly-proof chambers or receptacles, and should be regularly removed within six days in the summer. Farmyard manure should be regularly removed within the same time, and either spread on the fields or stored at a distance of not less than quarter of a mile, the further the better, from a house or dwelling.

House flies breed in such decaying and fermenting matter as kitchen refuse and garbage. Garbage receptacles should be kept tightly covered.

All such refuse should be burnt or buried within a few days, but at once if possible. No refuse should be left exposed. If it cannot be disposed of at once it should be sprinkled with chloride of lime.

Flies in Houses.

Windows and doors should be properly screened, especially those of the dining room and kitchen. Milk and other food should be screened in the summer by covering it with muslin; fruit should be covered also.

Where they are used, especially in public places, as hotels, etc., spittoons should be kept clean, as there is very great danger of flies carrying the germs of consumption from unclean spittoons.

Flies should not be allowed to have access to the sick room, especially in the case of infectious disease.

The faces of babies should be carefully screened with muslin.

Flies may be killed by means of a weak solution of formalin or formaldehyde exposed in saucers in the rooms. This is made by adding a tablespoonful of formaldehyde to a pint of water. The burning of pyrethrum in a room is also effective.

House flies indicate the presence of filth in the neighborhood or insanitary conditions.
