

66 CUBIC INCHES LARGER

NEVER DID RIM-CUT

DOCTOR

It matters not who the car owner is, he wants two things: Safety, Service.

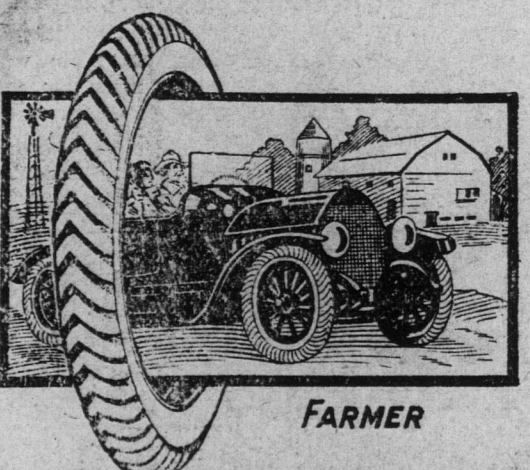

BECAUSE he gets these two and many others from Dunlop Traction Treads you find the car owner, whether he is Doctor, Merchant, Farmer or Manufacturer, one of the many seen driving cars equipped with the 'Most Envid Tire In All America.'

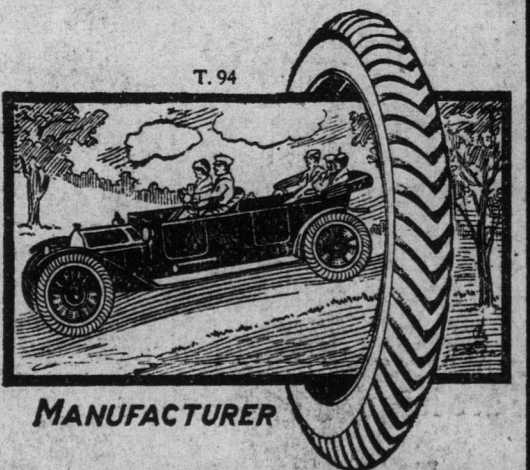

MERCHANT

Speed for the Doctor. Reliability for the Merchant. Comfort for the Farmer. Durability for the Manufacturer. SAFETY FOR ALL.

And these hosts of motorists not only travel in perpetual safety, but they never hear anything about rim-cutting, insufficient air capacity, etc., unless their acquaintances whose cars are unequipped with Dunlop Traction Treads tell them their tire troubles.

Divorced Life

by Helen Hessing Fuesler

Another Change of Abode

Long before the end of the week for which she had paid in advance for her cubby hole in the rooming house in New York's theatrical district Marian made up her mind to change her abode. The dismal court into which her single window gave would have driven her mad in another fortnight. New York makes transients of nearly all its newcomers, at least as long as they are strangers within its gates.

Her quest for a place to live took her uptown, toward Morningside Heights and the Columbia campus. There was a wholesome, respectable cleanliness, an orderly attractiveness about this region. As she prowled on and on, scrutinizing everything from luxurious apartments on Riverside Drive to kitchenettes housed in big hives of apartment houses, she felt woman's world-old yearnings for domesticity, and turned with regret to the more serious business of finding a mere room in a boarding house. In most cases the prices charged for room and board took her breath away.

At length her hunt led her to Mrs. Kerns on West One Hundred and Seventeenth Street. An attractive little card in the window made her pause and ring the bell. Mrs. Kerns received her grandly, making haste to inform the room hunter that she had not been long a landlady and referring frequently to the fact that for years, before the death of her husband, she had been a guest at the Prince Henry, one of the city's aristocratic hotels.

"I have a third floor front that you'll love," declared Mrs. Kerns, starting up the carpeted stairs of the airy, well-lighted, well-kept house. "I'm particular about the guests I accept. I hope you'll like the room I'm going to show you. You'd be surprised at the number of impossible applicants that the card in the window attracts. I simply have to give most of them one look and shut the door. We're all just like one family here, so you see I've got to be careful about whom I let my rooms to."

Marian saw the room, liked its view of the street, its fresh cleanliness, its gray, restful walls, its simple but comfortable furnishings, its big closet; and upon being informed that the weekly cost of this room and meals would be only nine dollars, she accepted on the spot.

"I'll have my things sent up this afternoon," she said, and her soul bounded with relief that her sentence to the musty hole of a place where sheer weariness of her former room hunt had induced her to stop had come to an end. She had dwelt there only a week, but already the week seemed like the stretched-out hours of a drab and heart-rending century.

Late that afternoon, as she raised the lid of her trunk in the cheerful little room at Mrs. Kerns', Marian wondered how much longer her nomadic life was to drag on. Little had she dreamed that her divorce would hurl her like a storm-driven cloud into the rushing elements of the real world of which she knew so little. Again her money, renewed by her two telegrams to Ann Stewart and her brother, was all but exhausted. She was no nearer an earning power to-day than on the fateful day of her divorce.

"Something has got to turn up," she mused grimly, as she bent over the belongings in her trunk.

"Something has got to turn up," she mused grimly, as she bent over the belongings in her trunk. She felt like a Bedouin. She dared not project her thoughts into the future. She had the feeling of an atom of life, suspended in the midst of a black chaos. She seemed to be looking at herself from vast distances, wondering vaguely what the chaotic forces were going to do to her.

"If I were only a man," she mused hopelessly. Such is the world-old longing of a woman who no longer has a husband to lean upon. To her the difference of sex is supreme. It is the determining factor between failure and success.

Try Again.

You have, it may be, used ointments, pastes, lotions for Eczema till you begin to get tired of trying things. Well, but you should remember that science is advancing all the time, and that what was not possible yesterday can be accomplished to-day. If you neglect to try Zylex—the newest and best thing that science has yet to offer for the relief and cure of Eczema and other annoying and disfiguring skin diseases—you are missing a great opportunity. It may be that it will cure you. It has cured some very bad cases. Price 50c. a box. Zylex Soap, 25c. a cake.

THE SMALLEST YET.—Though conditions were favourable the attendance was exceptionally small at last evening's football match. The receipts were $18, the lowest for the season.

Sad Spectacle

AT LAST EVENING'S FIRE ON THE KING'S ROAD.

A fire of an unknown origin broke out on the east side of King's Road at 6.30 last evening in the house owned by Mr. William Cook, victualler, and occupied by the top and larger portion of the building by a family named Sheppard, and in the ground flat by Mr. W. F. Kenny, who keeps a barber shop. In response to an alarm sent in, the Central and East End companies were quickly on the scene. The fire looked threatening at the outset and if there had been any wind in such a thickly populated neighborhood, the results would have been disastrous. A blaze which came from the barber shop was eating its way through the ceilings and was hard to get at. The firemen were hampered in many respects. The door of the shop kept by Kenny, was barred, the owner having left for home ten minutes previously, and had to be broken in. Next the place was filled with smoke which was so dense as to almost suffocate not a few of the firemen. The next difficult and tedious task was the removal from a room in the top flat, Mrs. Sheppard, who was very ill in bed, being only four days sick. The woman and her babe were tenderly placed on a stretcher by two fire-fighters and removed to the house of Mr. J. Hanley, on the opposite side of the street. The scene was a sad one and elicited the sympathy of the hundreds of people who witnessed it. After some strenuous labor the firemen got at the blaze. Two streams of water and the use of the chemical succeeded in extinguishing the fire a few minutes afterwards, but not before Mr. Sheppard's furniture was broken and badly damaged by smoke and water. Hudson's dry goods store at the rear also sustained slight damage, while Kenny's barber shop was completely wrecked. The fire, though its origin is unknown, is believed to have started in the barber shop. When the occupier left to go to tea, there was no sign of fire and besides Kenny did not have one cent of insurance on his stock.

SAFETY FIRST

Grips like the sole of an athlete's shoe

The cross bars on a football player's shoes give him a firm footing—he is able to run, jump, make sharp, quick turns with more assurance and safety.

The specially toughened Safety Bars on Goodrich Tires cut through the film and obtain a firm grip on the road surface—thus preventing the skid from starting.

And there's another reason why you should equip with Goodrich Safety Treads—the extra thickness at the point of contact insures extra wear.
