The Secret Out.

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his, and he looked almost handsome. "I could not make you understand, but—Did you ever have any great ambition?' he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before

Mr. Gryce smiled. 'You may talk to me as if I had," he

'Listen then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it; even 's interest was aroused, and he gave it his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce; "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on. "Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to arry out the test I propose, in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case and immediately. Have I made myself clear to you, and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

Mr. Gryce closed the pen-knife, whose sharp blade he had been considering through this long speech, and silently raised his head. The doctor surveyed him anxiously. What were his thoughts? His oldest friend and most trusted colleague could not have dis-

"Are the suspicions against me too strong for this display of indulgence?" persisted the physician. 'We will go to the superintendent," decided Mr. Gryce. Dr. Molesworth bowed his thanks, then made his final preparations for leaving. As they turned to quit the room he touched the detective on the

"Are you at liberty to tell me upon what evidence I have been arrested?" Mr. Gryce's mouth grew stern. That is the province of the district attorney. I am the arm of the law and not the mouth."

Dr. Molesworth said no more. A carriage was at the door, and they rede to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

As Mr. Gryce was buying the tickets, Dr. Molesworth whispered in his ear: "One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me." The detective pocketed his change and turned; the prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young. "We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else." Did he anticipate any discoveries in Washington?

CHAPTER XI.

There are dark pictures, and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in. 'You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better.' "And what shall that answer be?"

he inquired; "yes or no?" For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled. "You enjoy those gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of "And do you not enjoy them too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds.' He knew she did; he knew that contrary to all his expectations he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed "Genevieve," he remarked, "you are coming out under the shadow. You look almost brilliant today." "Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband to whose love and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause, as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but a conversation with but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment. Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage, and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered ex-clamation at his side, and turning, saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shrick, crying: "Light, give me more light!"

Astonished and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clasped over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.
"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain, to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or sorrow, or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.
"O, I have suffered," she cried, "suffered fearfully. I never thought to get through these last few hours alive, but—" Her hand which she had held over her heart, as if the pain was there, suddenly left it, and flashed with a swift gesture towards the New York which he held in his hand.

"The Herald!" she cried, "let me see it; the notice of our marriage should be there." And with a laugh that was almost hysterical, she carried the paper with her towards the window, saying, 'Anything to forget that pain. Frivolity, if frivolity can do it."

More and more troubled, for these actions were scarcely those of a sane woman, he watched her with darkness in his soul for a moment, and then seeing that her eye ran intelligently over the columns, he sank into a chair questioning within himself as to what was to be his fate. The sweetest of sounds aroused him. Genevieve was at his feet, looking up into his face with a calm, almost an eostatic, expression.

"Do I act wildly?" she murmured, her eyes gleaming with a natural light that yet looked very brilliant in contrast to the snowy locks which framed them on either side. "I think it is because my heart is so satisfied while my body is so racked with pain. But even that is better today; my hand is all that troubles me now." And she cast her eyes down when she again became conscious of her white locks." (To be Continued.)

UNION PICNICS.

Of Three South London Sunday Schools.

Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist-Races, Prize Winners, a Big Crowd and a Grand Time.

The Askin Street Methodist, Knox Presbyterian and the Baptist Sunday schools of South London, held a union picnic at Port Stanley yesterday, and the hundreds of children, teachers and parents who went down to the lake shore had a good time. The promoters of the picnic had many substantial reasons for outing on the one day, and the great success attending their efforts will be a guarantee for union picnics in the future. The L. E. and D. R. R. ran several first class trains, and on arriving at Port the picnickers engaged themselves in the usual ways until 1:30 o'clock, when a series of races were begun on the hill. The contests resulted as follows:

THE WOODSTOCK HOSPITAL

Formally Opened in the Presence of a Great Crowd of Visitors.

Woodstock, July 10.—At the opening of the new hospital here yesterday by Lieutenant-Governor Kirkpatrick the attendance of visitors during the afternoon was larger than its accommo-dation provided for, and it was found necessary to conduct the exercises in the open space in front of the building. After inspecting the building, in company with Mr. T. C. Paterson, of the Lieutenant-Governor addressed the gathering from the steps in front of the main entrance, and declared the hospital open. He charac-terized the building as being one of the best-equipped in the Province, and congratulated the people of Woodstock and the county on the success of their efforts to secure an asylum for the invaild. Addressesc of welcome were delivered by Mayor Cole and by S. M. Douglas on behalf of the hospital trust; Dr. Strange, of Toronto; Dr. Russell, superintendent of the Hamilton asylum; Dr. O'Reilly, superintendent of the Toronto General Hospital, and a few local speakers, gave short addresses. Miss M. Warren Falkiner, of Belleville, has been appointed lady superintendent; Miss Peacefield, of Norwich, probationer nurse, and Miss Dunn, of Toronto, head nurse.

APPLES WILL BE PLENTIFUL

Other Fruits Short to Medium Crops Hamilton July 10.-The fruit men are now in a position to say definitely what the crops are likely to be. Rasp-berries will yield well, but owing to the failure of strawberries will be in big demand and good prices will pre-vail. Currants will be a fair yield, but there will be few gooseberries. Of the larger fruits early peaches will be very scarce, and the later varieties will not be plentiful. In some sections plums are plentiful, but on the whole the crop will be poor. Pears will also be scarce Fortunately, the staple of all fruits, apples, will be a good crop.

HENRY GEORGE'S PANACEA.

Warranted to Cure Tenement Evils Among Others.

Henry George, Tom L. Johnson, and the other single taxers had a great time the other night in Chickering Hall. Mr. George was to give his views on the report of the committee on tenement reform. Mr. Johnson arrived unannounced, and was discovered and brought to the platform amid cries of "There can't be too much Johnson," and the like. When Mr. George had exhausted his subject in a speech that lasted two hours, Mr. Johnson spoke for three minutes. Mr. Gilder, Dr. Rainsford, Dr. Adler, and Prof. Seligman were not there, although Mr. George, who had disagreed with them publicly in Cooper Union on Wednesday night, had invited them all. There was only one discordant element in the approval that met Mr. George's opinion, and he was summarily removed from the hall by two stout single taxers. Mr. Gilder was the only invited guest to acknowledge invitation. His letter of regret said:

"Mr. George did not know that the committee has invited your president to make a statement before it, which will be published in the record of the public hearing. As an editor I have also in the past given Mr. George himself, the platform of the Century Magazine. This would not seem to show an invincible prejudice [against him and his views on my part."
