How Belgium is Menaced.

How Belgium to Manaced

Despite the censure that the Belgian Chamber of Deputies has placed upon Gan. Vondersmissen, and the subsequent apology demanded from that officer for his publicly expressed criticisms of the Chamber's proceedings, there is one suggestion contained in the flery officer's words that may be adopted by the Government. In the general's address to the army when he denounced the rejection by the Chamber of the personal multary service bill he said that Belgium would be obliged to depend upon her army and defences for her future independence and honor. That the Government will improve the significant suggestion seems exceedingly probable, judging from recent information. With a peace army of less than 50,000 men and with frontier lines not well protected, this sturdy little portion of the low country this sturdy little portion of the low countring the easily become the battlefield of the might easily become the battlefield of the continent in our day, as it was in the 17th century. Looking at continental affairs in the most favorable light one does not see how a war can long be avoided. With Russia placing the most obnoxious restrictions upon German citizens within her borders with France treating her residents. the most favorable light one does not see how a war can long be avoided. With Russis placing the most obnoxious restrictions upon German citizens within her borders, with France treating her residents from the same country to oppression and in some cases violence, together with the monetary repulse Russia meets with at German hands and the general hatred of the French by Germans, a war between these countries appears inevitable. Added to this it is no secret now that Russian agents have been and still are urging the fraperssible Boulanger to bring about a crisis between his country and Germany, and Boulanger is ready to go to any extreme, even to plunging France into a war, that he may play the role of hero, and is ready to die if by so deing he can send his name.

down to posterity as the "Savior of France." The Belgian Government, aware of the exceeding narrowness of Europe's peace lines, see the advisability of placing their country somewhat on an equality with her neighbors. They appreciate that if France was attacked by Germany, Belgium would be likely to be made an entrance into the Gaul's domain, and vice versa. Belgium possesses no fortresses on any of her frontiers, but an effort will be made to strengthen it somewhat, and to increase the army. Quietly and deliberately this work will be done, for another danger threatens his. If the powers feared any interference in their plans or found that the offshoot of the Netherlands was likely to become at all a formidable enemy or rival, some pretext might be found for swallowing the cause of such an untimely annoyance.
