COMMUNICATIONS.

FOR THE STANDARD.

Mr. Editor,

When I noticed in your publication of the 13th inst. the communication, or rather part of one, signed "Vindicator," together with your account of its editorial purport, I was doubly surprised and mortified—first, that any well-wisher of mine should make any such invidious and unwarrantable distinctions as are therein contained; and secondly, since the passages you say you expunged were rejected avowedly on account of their personality—you did not apply your scissors to the face of that article. All that now remains for me to do in reference to the offence and unbecoming conduct manifested by Mr. Brown's attack on me, is to assure him that I had no knowledge of the matter being in the press, I should not have been the first to insist upon its expungement. But I knew nothing regarding the contents of the article which contained it, and I call upon "Vindicator," whoever he may be, to say whether I had anything to do with, or was at all concerned about, his communications.

But with this I dissent on the particular point alluded to, my "concern" for the sake of respect to the general drift of the last Vindicator's structure, I believe is far from being the only reason why the County was desirous of retaining about the "strange drama," enacted lately at Head Quarters, and in which Mr. Brown "starred" so energetically, but with such partial success. He appears sadly to have forgotten "Hamlet's advice to the Players."

He seems to chuckle at the opportunity given him of getting in contact with me on the subject-matter of the "strange drama." Every sentence towards the conclusion of his last communication breathes foregone designs of fullest vengeance. He virtuously calls upon Presbyterians (meaning particularly no doubt my own congregation) to stand awe-struck by, in order to "see the conquering hero come"—very brave, and let slip the dogs of war, against their Pastor. And, after offering, concluding his instance; then, like another Achan, drag me, like another Uzziah, a gladiatorial and gory spectacle, after the wheels of his triumphal car. I am, essentially, as well as I am, by disposition, a man of peace, but I confess I am not much frightened by these "conquering heroes," nor, in the case of my own congregation, I am not much frightened by these "conquering heroes," nor, in the case of my own congregation, I am not much frightened by these "conquering heroes."

Mr. B. says that he is not a "conquering hero," but a "conquering hero," and let slip the dogs of war, against their Pastor. And, after offering, concluding his instance; then, like another Achan, drag me, like another Uzziah, a gladiatorial and gory spectacle, after the wheels of his triumphal car. I am, essentially, as well as I am, by disposition, a man of peace, but I confess I am not much frightened by these "conquering heroes," nor, in the case of my own congregation, I am not much frightened by these "conquering heroes."
