Mr. Beaman's Mistake:

AN OLD-FASHIONED STORY.

BY EMMA B. COBB.

(Concluded.)

And Robert! Was he ignorant of the state of things? He might have soon but he would not. He heard it said that Lizzie loved Mark Boynton, and he would not believe it. Had he not loved her all his life as a young man could? Had he not a right to her? He had missed happiness once, and now he was again within his grasp, who should say that he ought to give it up? Lizzie would be happy. She loved him already. They would love him wholly when she was his wife. That other man, but a passing fancy. He shut his eyes to the evidence of her pale and sorrowful face, silenced all inward remonstrances and held his way.

The preparations for the marriage were rather hurried forward, for Mrs. Ezra thought the sooner it was over the better. Lizzie made no objection. She was to be, as she had been, the wife of her father's friend, and she was to be the wife of a man who had loved her all his life as a young man could. She was to be the wife of a man who had missed happiness once, and now he was again within his grasp, who should say that he ought to give it up? Lizzie would be happy. She loved him already.
