

ten by experts, takes up the fields one by one, and discusses the various organizations, congregational, Young Peoples Societies and Sabbath Schools, for the support of the work.

The Presbyterian Record (Rev. E. Scott, Editor, Y. M. C. A. Building, Montreal, price 25 cents a year in quantities) should be in every home. It is devoted especially to the mission work of the church. All contributions for the church Schemes are acknowledged in the Record. Mr. Scott is an editor of long experience, and the information from fields at home and abroad is fresh month by month. A special feature of the Record of late has been a full account of the Home Mission Work in the West, Presbytery by Presbytery, written by men on the ground. Many congregations supply a copy of the Record to each family; a good example to be followed.

No work on the International Lessons has so thoroughly stood the test of time as Peloubet's Select Notes (W. A. Wilder, Boston). The volume for 1905, 375 pages, illustrations, maps and diagrams) not only stands the test, but is a distinct advance on the high standard of its thirty and more predecessors. We miss the name M. A. Peloubet, long associated with that of Dr. F. N. Peloubet, on the title page. The name of Amos R. Wells takes its place. Where Amos R. Wells goes, he carries freshness with him, and Dr. Peloubet is perennially fresh. There must, of course, necessarily be repetition, where the lessons are repeated from time to time, but it is always repetition with a new light, and every year features of value are added. In this volume it is an Inductive Study introducing each lesson, a study which throws the teacher, as every teacher ought to be thrown, right back, in the first place, upon the Bible itself. The Heart of the Lesson, with its numerous points and illustrations, seems particularly good in this new volume, and amongst the cuts are many fresh ones from original sources. Peloubet always aims at giving the lesson in its surroundings and connections, making it as little as possible a fragment; and this feature alone will commend the Select Notes as one of the books to be had by those who wish to get a strong grasp of their work as teachers.

The Bible in Practical Life contains the addresses, discussions and other proceedings of the second annual convention of the Religious Education Association, and is issued from their office (153 La Salle St., Chicago, 640 pages, with indexes, $2.00).

It is not a mere report, but is a volume of treatises, many of them of high value, and all of deep and present interest as indicating the value set upon the Bible by educators, and their notions as to how Bible study may be best promoted in the home, in Sabbath and day schools, and in the colleges and universities. Professor McFadyen of Knox College, and Dr. Tracy, of Toronto University, are each represented by able papers. Amongst other valuable services to Sabbath School work, the Religious Education Association is useful in bringing some leading educators in the United States into contact with that work who have hitherto stood largely aloof.
