

opinion to present reflection; it confesses that extempore forms are dead. Devotion has gone and left the preaching in possession of the house; that has been a true story a long time. But the forms cannot even be galvanized. The only way is for Mr. Beecher to take what his father threw away in self-will, the liturgy, the common Prayer Book, the birthright of all English speaking men, a birthright whose hearty, and tenderness and devotion, no man can better confess than he, when the mother's blood stirs at his heart.—New York Churchman.
