

Of the men of a later date I would mention Doctors K. N. Fenwick and H. J. Saunders. The former of these was widely known as a surgeon, and did more, perhaps, than anyone else in this section of country to advance surgery to its present efficiency. He was the means of having a training school for nurses established in connection with the General Hospital and of thus making that institution what its name implies—a home for the relief and cure of the sick and the suffering. Everyone who knows anything about a medical education realizes how essentially important to the student is a good hospital. In this respect both the hospital and the Medical Faculty owe a debt of gratitude to the late Dr. K. N. Fenwick.

Dr. Saunders devoted himself more to medicine than to surgery, and so his achievements in the eyes of the public were perhaps not so brilliant as those of Dr. Fenwick, but to his fellow-practitioners in this section of the country he was known as probably the best informed medical man in Eastern Ontario, and, was regarded as a safe and reliable consultant. As a member of the Faculty he was invaluable. His calm and impartial judgment was a great strength in the Faculty's deliberations. The untimely deaths of these two men, occurring, as they did, within a month of each other, were severe blows to the Faculty, keenly felt by all their colleagues.

I have purposely left any mention of our late Dean, Dr. Fife Fowler, to the last. He stands alone. A member of the Faculty when it began its work, he remained continuously a member of it until his death a few short months ago. If any of us have any regret in connection with this Jubilee it is that he who saw the Faculty's birth, who assisted in its early struggles, who was its friend and one of its mainstays in its dark days, who saw it gaining in strength and usefulness until it had become no mean institution, was not spared a little longer and permitted to take part in the Jubilee of the Faculty which he loved so much and to which he devoted his life. Dr. Fowler was a man of rare attainments and liberal education. Quiet and reserved in his manner, he was by those who did not know him regarded as cold and unsympathetic. To those who
