Canada-Mexico Partnership: Increasing trade and investment

As North American countries and partners in the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), Canada and Mexico have become significant trading partners and close allies. The trade and investment relationship is one of confidence and growth. Canada has developed into Mexico's second-largest export market, while Mexico is now Canada's fifth-largest export destination. With a young, growing population of more than 100 million, Mexico's economy will offer abundant opportunities for Canada to build upon this already expansive trade and investment relationship. Among other initiatives, the innovative and rapidly-growing Canada-Mexico Partnership is being used to capitalize on these opportunities.

The Canada-Mexico Partnership (CMP) was launched in October 2004, at the same time that the two countries were celebrating 60 years of diplomatic relations, as well as the 40th anniversary of NAFTA. The main purpose of the partnership is to enhance relationships between the two countries and to further cooperation in a broad range of priority areas. These priorities have formed a rich basis for dialogue and cooperation, as demonstrated by the successes achieved in the first year of the Partnership.

The first CMP Report to Leaders was released on September 30, 2005, during the visit to Canada of Mexican President Vicente Fox. The report highlights key accomplishments by the Partnership's working groups on competitiveness, human capital and urban development and housing. Each working group has been organised to bring together business leaders, key economic actors and senior policy makers, and

On March 8, 2006, a similar event will be held in Burlington (ON) for Ontario companies.

The objective of the seminars is to assure that imported foods comply with U.S. laws and regulations by educating the import community and achieving voluntary compliance, whenever possible. The ultimate goal is to speed up the import process for all involved, which should result in a
