himself to the acquirement of knowledge, and the marked superiority he manifested over his fellows, both in his power of concentrating his mind and attention to the matter with which he was occupied, and also the success with which he maintained that application to the very end.

His progress here was a marked one, exhibiting the good effects of thorough early training in enabling him to take honors in nearly every subject of his professional curriculum.

I know that there was but one opinion held here of Dr. MONTIZAMBERT, that he was an honor to any school with which he was connected, as an example of a thorough good student, and as certain not only to succeed in his profession, but to maintain and extend its reputation by his character, professional attainments and zeal.

MY DEAR SIR,

I am glad to learn that you propose offering yourself as candidate for an hospital appointment, and I hope that you will be successful, because I am sure that you only want a good field for the exercise of your professional talents and acquirements to show what they are. I most gladly comply with your request for a testimonial.

As a student at the University you were characterized by the regularity of your attendance, your devotion to the work of your classes and your desire to acquire knowledge. That you worked at your studies to good purpose was shown by the very excellent appearance you made at your examinations for the Degree, and the honors which you carried off in several of your classes. You have had special opportunities of becoming practically acquainted with your profession in the Hospital here, and you have made good use of them.

I feel assured that if appointed to the office which you now seek for, you will prove yourself to be an efficient and trustworthy medical practitioner.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

DOUGLAS MACLAGAN,

Professor of Medical Jurisprudence,

University of Edinburgh.
