AN INDEX OF DIFFERENTIAL DIAGNOSIS OF THE MAIN SYMPTOMS. By HENRY F. FORD, M.A., M.D. (Oxon.), F.R.C.P. (Lond.), Physician, Pathologist, and Lecturer, General Hospital. Together with 22 SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS.

This work aims at being of practical utility whenever the doctor arises in deciding the precise cause of any particular symptom. It covers the whole ground of Medicine and Surgery. The volume deals with Diagnosis from a standpoint which is unique. It is an Index in that its articles are arranged in alphabetical order, but a work upon Differential Diagnosis in that it discusses the methods of distinguishing between the various diseases in which each individual symptom may be observed. Whilst the Index of the book thus deals with Symptoms, the General Index, containing some 1,000 references, gathers these together under the various Diseases in which they occur.
