A TALENTED YOUNG WOMAN

In the water color section of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, there was hung last month, for the annual spring exhibition, an exceptionally well and daintily executed example of modern genre water color painting, entitled "A Summer Day in Arcady." It bore merely the artist's initials—"S. L.," and the official catalog gave no further inkling of his identity. For boldness and depth of coloring, it was pronounced by critics as one of the best examples of that class of work recently offered for display. The characteristics of the picture made it almost a certainty that the artist was of the sterner sex, but the artist was of the sterner sex, but

Miss Lina Rogers of New York, the supervising nurse appointed to superintend the new department of medical examination in the public schools, was yesterday formally introduced to some of the members of the board, constituting the special sub-committee on medical inspection, by John Ross Robertson of the Sick Chuldren's Hospital.

She outlined the work as it is car-rien on in New York, and it was sug-gested that as Toronto has, like New York, a large percentage of foreign population, the same system on a smaller scale might apply. Miss Rogers outlined the New York system as follows: as follows:

There should be a small dispensary in every school. This would not cost more than a few dollars, and is a necessity. When a child is examined and found to have organic trouble, the examining nurse will go to the home of that child and investigate the conditions under which the child is living, and advise the mother what is best. If it is not possible for the child, thru the family to receive the required treatment, the nurse will take charge of the case. No class room ought to be interrupted for more than seven to ten minutes a week in the carrying out of this work.

It was decided that for the present the work, which is merely an experiment, should be carried on by one doctor, and two nurses, including Miss Rogers. Dr. Helen MacMurchy and Miss Alice Robertson and Miss Ella Jamieson, nurses, were chosen. Both these nurses received their training at the Sick Children's Hospital, and have
