Three of the four main craters at the St. Eloi salient remain in British hands after several days' fighting, according to the war office in London, which also reported, last night, that British troops hold a considerable portion of the ground which they captured there on March 27. The Germans heavily bombarded the British trenches at St. Eloi on Saturday and the British defenders retaliated in kind. A revival of mining operations is noted in the Loos sector and one of these was sprung by the enemy yesterday in the Hohenzollern sector. Artillery was especially active on both sides about the following points: Neuville St. Vaast, Souchez, the Hohenzollern redoubt. A Fokker monoplane was also brought down in the British lines. In this connection it might be said that since the election of Pemberton Billing to the house of commons, the Fokker scare in England has vanished. This machine, it is now found, is built on the lines of an old French model.

News from the Russian front tells of a continuance of trench warfare with the breaking out of violent artillery exchanges at strategic points as in the region of Shlok, near Riga, and of the lakes, south of Dvinsk. The Austrians who came out of their trenches to attack the Russians on the middle Stripa were hurriedly driven back by their officers when they perceived that the Russians were not only ready to give them a suitable reception, but were preparing to counter-attack them. The Germans were also repulsed in an attempt to get close to the Russian positions north of Lake Narocz. The epidemic broke out in December, 1914. "Thereupon," says the report, "the German staff, military and medical precipitately left the camp and thenceforth until August, 1915, no communication was held between the prisoners and their guards except by means of directions shouted from the guards or officers remaining outside the wire entanglements.

"All supplies for the men were pushed into the camp over chutes. No medical attention during the whole time was provided by the German staff."

Provided No Mattresses.

Captain Lauder reports that while in the bungalows there was normally one mattress for three men, in the improvised hospital there were no mattresses at all.

"In consequence," he says, "there were many typhus patients scattered over the compounds who were determined not to come into the hospital if they could help it."

In one compound he found 50 hidden cases of typhus during the first month. The food ration for each patient was half a petit pain (roll) and half a cup of milk per day. The only soup obtainable came from the camp kitchen, and as it was brought in open wooden tubs it was full of dust and dirt.

and three died. It was then that Major Priestley and Captain Vidal went to the hospital to join Captain Lauder, who was down with typhus. Major Priestley says that the patients, alive with vermin, lay so close to one another on floor that he had to stand straddle-legged across them to examine them. There were other conditions that are indescribable. There was difficulty in obtaining sufficient drugs and dressings for a long time, and extreme bed sores were common. In several cases the toes or the whole feet became gangrenous. The washing of patients was out of the question until a supply of soap was obtained from England.

This shortage of necessities was not due to lack of supplies, say the doctors, for on a visit to the town they saw an abundance of every requisite.

Dr. Aschenbach, who was in chasse the speaker, "and I placed my views before the legislature in this regard, but was told it was ultra vires. You or on a visit to the town they saw an abundance of every requisite.

Dr. Aschenbach, who was in charge of the hospital, and who, the committee understood, received the Iron Cross for combating the epidemic, only paid one visit to the camp, according to the report, and that after some order was evolved.

Sixty deaths occurred among the British, and the victims were buried outside the camp.

"What the prisoners found hardest "What the prisoners found hardest to bear in the matter of burial," says the report, "were the joers with which coffins were frequently greeted by the inhabitants of Wittenberg, who stood outside the wires and were permitted to insult the dead."

After the middle of April the conditions commenced to improve and with the arrival of warm weather the cases rapidly decreased, and by the cases rapidly decreased, and by the middle of May all the British were convalescent. Adequate provision was made to deal with any future outbreaks, improvements being effected according to the committee, as a re-

Gerard and members of his staff.

Notorious for Crueity.

The committee condemn the retention of Dr. Aschenbach as head of the camp, and as evidence of his at-titude cite an incident. When one of his staff supported the request of Captain Lauder for medical requisites he curtly refused the request with the words, "Schweine Englander."

The report continues: "The cruelty of the administration of the Wittenberg camp became notorious. Savage dogs were habitually employed to terrorize the prisoners; flogging with a rubber whip was frequent. Men were struck with little or no provocation and tied to posts with hands above their heads for hours. Captain Lauder reports that many of these men went so far to look upon typhus, with all its horrors, as a godsend. They preferred it to the presence of German guards."

LIEUT. JONES, WINNIPEG WAS KILLED IN ACTION

Canadian Medical Service, that the authorities have no desire or intention of separating wounded Canadians from the wounded of other branches of the imperial force. It is well known that all the Canadian hospitals established here receive just such wounded as are sent them from the base. Probably any variation of this system, even if advisable, would be found impossible in practice. A striking example of how the war has caused the medical services of different parts of the empire to become intermingled is afforded by the arrival at the Canadian Red Cross Hospital at Cliveden Saturday of a convoy of 120 wounded, the majority being English, with a few intralians and New Zealanders, but only one Canadian. WINNIPEG, April 9.—Cable advices received here announce the death of Lieut. R. E. N. Jones. He was killed in action on April 6. He was manager of the Alexander avenue Winnipeg branch of the Bank of Commerce, and was a brother of H. B. F. Jones, assistant general manager of the Bank of Toronto, coming of a noted U.E.L. stock. Lieut. Jones held senior positions with the bank in Calgary and Vancouver, and was well-known in Western Canada as a golfer and sportsman generally. He was unmarried.
