A SOCIAL DUEL STIRS LONDON
Mrs. Churchill Brainy Rival of Premier's Wife
THE WAY IT WORKS
Wife of First Lord Usurping Position of Mrs. Asquith, Who Should Be Socially Supreme—Some Things Which Have Assisted Her

(Times' Special Correspondence)
London, March 18.—One of the most interesting struggles for social supremacy ever witnessed in English political society is now being waged between the wives of two of Britain's foremost statesmen. For more than a year Mrs. Winston Churchill, wife of the brilliant first lord of the Admiralty and probable future prime minister, has been attempting with considerable success to wrest from Mrs. Asquith, wife of the present premier, the position of chief political hostess of the Liberal party.

The duel between these two women has, of course, been conducted in the most decorous manner possible. There has been no public rupture and little or no outward evidence of contesting antagonism between them; but the intimate friends of both have been aware that for some time the wife of the younger minister has been covertly and unostentatiously but none the less surely challenging the social supremacy that, among the great political hostesses, has always been accorded in England to the wife of the premier.

Indeed, so cleverly is this supremacy accorded automatically to the wife of the prime minister that Mrs. Asquith, who is so brilliant and so ambitious, would never have thought of challenging it but for the fact that Mrs. Asquith did things which, as the wife of a less important person than the prime minister would have done, have served to enhance her reputation for cleverness,—but which actually smacked of the more staid and influential of the powerful Liberal women who affect the city.

These women, like Lady Granard, Lady Cowdray and Lady Crewe, thought it became the dignity of the prime minister's wife to have her name freely mentioned in the press as having given a party at Downing street with the direct object of helping to advertise the gowns of a French modiste. One slip of the tongue, however, might have been forgiven, but then came others in quick succession. There were several hostesses who declined to go to the witness box, glibly smilingly asserted that they were not invited, and then came Mrs. Asquith's house to meet a barefoot dancer upon whom the prime minister's wife chose to bestow her particular attention some few years ago. Soon after came the case when Mrs. Asquith, in the witness box, glibly smilingly asserted that she was not invited, and then came Mrs. Asquith's house to meet a barefoot dancer upon whom the prime minister's wife chose to bestow her particular attention some few years ago.

These and other indiscretions on the part of the premier's wife gave the opportunity for Mrs. Winston Churchill to come forward as a social leader, whom the great Liberal hostesses preferred to rally than round a lady of so eccentric a disposition as Mrs. Asquith.

Mrs. Churchill was well equipped for the role she was called upon to play. In addition to her considerable intellectual gifts, she possesses great personal charm and a manner that is at once entirely dignified and yet unostentatiously friendly and pleasant. She began by giving the pleasant little dinner-parties at her house in Eccleston Square, but her guests were not confined to the members of the Liberal party, and these dinners soon came to be looked on as among the most important of social events in the political world.

Mrs. Asquith has never attempted this sort of thing. Her entertainments of her husband's party have always on a large scale; they consisted of great evening parties and "political salons" of the kind which have been held in England since the days of Disraeli, and her efforts in this direction were not conspicuously successful. They degenerated into a general social functions to which no one attached any political importance.

It would have been obviously impossible

DON'T SCOLD CROSS, IRRITABLE CHILDREN
If Tongue is Coated, Stomach Sour, Breath Fervish, Bowels Clogged, Give "Syrup of Figs"

Mother! look at the tongue! see if it is coated. If your child is listless, drooping, isn't sleeping well, is restless, doesn't eat heartily or is cross, irritable, out of sorts with everybody, stomach sour, feverish, breath bad; has stomachache, diarrhoea, sore throat, head is full of cold, if these little ones' stomach, liver and bowels are filled with poisons and clogged up waste and need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

Give a teaspoonful of Syrup of Figs, and in a few hours the foul, decaying, constipated matter, undigested food and sour bile will gently move on and out of its little bowels without nausea, griping or weakness, and you will surely have a well and smiling child shortly.

With Syrup of Figs you are not drugging your children, being composed entirely of luscious figs, senna and aromatic herbs, it cannot be harmful, besides they dearly love its delicious taste.

Mother! should always keep Syrup of Figs handy. It is the only stomach, liver and bowel cleanser and regulator needed—a little given today will save a sick child tomorrow.

Full directions for children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the package.

Ask your druggist for the full name, "Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna," prepared by the California Fig Syrup Co. This is the delicious tasting, genuine old reliable. Refuse anything else offered.

George. Now Mrs. Lloyd George is a quiet, kind-hearted, unpretentious sort of woman who finds herself somewhat lost in the great world in which her husband moves so forcibly. But for all that, the wife of the chancellor of the exchequer is, in her own way, a person of some influence.

The wives of the middle class manufacturers who form so strong a section of the radical party, regard Mrs. Lloyd George as a person of the greatest consequence and to offend her was to offend them. Mrs. Winston Churchill had the tact to perceive this, and when she "took up" Mrs. Lloyd George and made her special friend she did as clever a thing as Mrs. Asquith did a foolish thing in snubbing her.

Mrs. Churchill's friendship for Mrs. Lloyd George has cemented the social bonds between the middle class and the aristocratic and exclusive ladies of the Liberal party. They both meet at Mrs. Churchill's house, and it is a testimony to the real cleverness of their hostess that they can do so without any quarrels arising between them.

At the Churchill's house you may see the most exclusive liberal hostesses, like Lady Crewe and Lady Granard, hobnobbing with the wives and daughters of the middle class manufacturers from the north and the latter depart delighted and charmed and full of party loyalty. These new gatherings have been a tremendous success and a tremendous triumph for the talented wife of the first lord of the Admiralty.

And so the Churchill's house has now become the recognized headquarters of liberal social activities, and it is Mrs. Winston Churchill whom the great liberal ladies come to consult when arranging their own social programmes. Mrs. Asquith remains, of course, the official premier liberal hostess. The official dinners to the party leaders are given at her house, and she, of course, controls the invitation lists to the foreign office receptions. But it is Mrs. Winston Churchill's house and not the premier's residence in Downing street that has become the real headquarters of these social activities which so profoundly influence party politics in England.
