> What Canada Has Irretreviably Lost and What Might Have Gained.

Ottawa, April 11.—It is interesting to move about the capital and listen to the opinions of men of good business habits and of a thoughtful turn of mind discuss the situation created by the defeat of the government Yukon bill by the senate. Your correspondent to-day talked over the matter with two or three wellinformed individuals, whose opinions may be regarded as of some value, and he was surprised to find the unanimity of opinion that prevailed. It was well said by a French philosopher that agree-ment if true conviction amongst men who have not formed their opinions by mutual concessions is an evidence of truth, but that an agreement, if the opinion is erroneous, without intercourse, well nigh an impossibility, The Senate's Great Mistake.

Those whose opinions were sought, for day were quite agreed that the senate had made a great mistake, both in its own interests and in the interests of the country. The contract made by the government with Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann was for furnishing the Yukon country with a railway without casting any burden whatever on the people. The compensation was a grant of land this road to the seaboard; and that if which was utterly worthless unless made the parliament of Canada undertook to to yield up whatever treasure was in it, get on without a road, they would lost people living in the country, where there was neither food nor clothing, except what was brought in from abroad, and where the compensation upon the trade would amply reward the government and the public for all the expenditure made on account of the new possession. The Canadian Aspect.

The senate had before its eyes, said these gentlemen, the evidence that the United States upon the Pacific coast and their representatives at Washington were frustrating the policy of the government, an evidence in itself that that policy was in the interests of the Canadian people, for had it been otherwise the men of San Francisco and Seattle would have had no interests in fighting a policy if they did not feel that it was taking away the trade from themselves and giving it to the inhabitants of Victoria and Vancouver.

British Columbia Betrayed. have voted against a public measure its corporation. The current of immigra-calculated to bestow greater advantages tion now flows to the Yukon country, to that province than anything ever done and it will do so from various directions, for it since it came into the union, not and even if the Yukon were to be blotted astonishment. In fact, such a proceeding was idiotic, and it would be as well in that direction will have filled up Britto transfer matters of public concern of the province to the representatives of a lunatic asylum, for even in their maddest moments they could not have done the province a creater injury.

"This," said one of the gentlemen, in a very emphatic manner. "is Canada's of its achievements, seeing that it was at once called upon to promote an enter-prise that would build up large cities on the Lynn canal by a trade that would be exclusively Canadian. The senate seems to have acted on the assumption that Canada was sufficiently honored by having to bear the cost of governing that country without deriving any advantage from its possession, either through the mines that were being worked, or the trade that was carried on by the mining

What Will Be Done Now. Your correspondent asked the gentle-men in question whether they thought it wise that the government should proceed with any further attempt at railway con struction this year. It was pointed out to them that a great many friends of the senate engaged in manufacturing enter-prises or trade would not feel the pinch arising from the action of the senate by which the injury might be repaired, but the reply was that this would be a village policy for a matter of great na-

Extension to Another Port. They expressed the opinion that the have a permanent value for a long time grow up on Canadian soil to come, that everything indicated immense gold deposits, and that the government might well modify the scheme by extending the route to Portland Canal or Observatory Inlet, or some other point in Canadian territory on the seaboard. If this were done a large seaport would Port Simpson or further north, and Canadian city would be at once called into existence instead of at Lynn Canal, which is in possession of the United States. The Burden on Canada. The Canadian people could in this way control the trade and make their way into Alaska, as well as the Yukon. They ence, and the great expense of getting men and ammunition of war, food and clothing, into the Yukon country, and and this could only be done by mining the trade and possibly lose the country, parties, which would give employment to people living in the country, where there be called upon to bear the burdens of governing the country without a railway and without getting anything from th country to assist them in doing so. A Subsidy and Land Grant.

In this view all three gentlemen agreed. They said a subsidy in addition to a land grant would clear the extra cost in getting in supplies for the maintenance of the police and any military force that might be sent there. It was pointed out to them that the view of the house of commons might differ as widely, from theirs on this question as did the the view of the senate in the recent discussion, but the answer was that the house of commons was not capable of taking so narrow and short-sighted a view; at all events there were men amongst them with sufficient foresight and sufficiently well-informed to protect them against throwing away the first opportunity that Canada has had British Columbia Betrayed. since the Grand Trunk railway was built.
