An "Acadia" Fire Policy is best for you.

Every promise made to the insured on the face of an ACADIA FIRE POLICY is lived up to. For over half a century every honest claim has been justly paid. For the morris, and settlements have been prompt and fair.

Every honest loss is paid in full without cash discount. Being non-tariff in the Maritime Provinces our rates are low.

If your business permanence depends on the Fire Insurance you carry for its protection, you should eliminate entirely every element of chance by insuring with a company whose record is one of proved worth.

Every business man needs indemnity that meets losses sure and promptly. An Acadia Policy is the safeguard you should have.

CLOTHES COUNT.

The other day, a man who is a mighty good judge of human nature was telling a few friends how he had just recently had a narrow escape from being done out of several hundred dollars. In the course of the conversation he said that one of the reasons why he judged that his man was not what he had represented himself to be and that he was very much up and was the fact that the fellow in question had worn the same suit from the first time he came to town. Clothes count, don't they?

and in consideration of the town's sound financial position afford a very desirable channel for trustee or conservative private investment.

Present prices for all Canadian Municipal Debentures are very low, but this is merely a reflection of the price depression apparent in all other securities.

With the return of normal conditions Municipal Debentures bought at the present low prices should show a substantial appreciation in the near future.

We have prepared a special Amherst circular containing full particulars of this issue and showing the satisfactory condition of the town's finances. If you are interested we will send you a copy.

A Safe Investment.

ONE of the safest investments of to-day is to place your spare cash in building lots. It will in a short time yield for you a large return. No fear of land depreciating in value. Purchase a lot as an investment—if you do not want it for your own use, secure one for your wife or children as a sensible present, and watch it grow in value. Do not buy it for cash, pay for it by instalments. The easy payments you will never miss. Call and see us, and we will explain the plan more fully.

THE LADY OF THE PENOBSCOT.
A FEW photographs of foreign scenes tucked on the walls; a Roman blanket hung as a tapestry over the mantel; a portfolio and traveler's writing materials distributed about a table prepared for the purpose, and additions to the meager bookshelf—a line of Basileuses, a pocket atlas, a comprehensive American railway guide, several volumes of German and French poetry—and the place was not so bad. Armitage slept for an hour after a simple luncheon had been prepared by Oscar, studied his letters and cablegrams, made in fact some notes in regard to them, and wrote rapidly. Then at 4 o'clock he told Oscar to send the horses.

Chapter XIII

THE LADY OF THE PENOBSCOT.
A FEW photographs of foreign scenes tucked on the walls; a Roman blanket hung as a tapestry over the mantel; a portfolio and traveler's writing materials distributed about a table prepared for the purpose, and additions to the meager bookshelf—a line of Basileuses, a pocket atlas, a comprehensive American railway guide, several volumes of German and French poetry—and the place was not so bad. Armitage slept for an hour after a simple luncheon had been prepared by Oscar, studied his letters and cablegrams, made in fact some notes in regard to them, and wrote rapidly. Then at 4 o'clock he told Oscar to send the horses.

"We shall go down into the valley, Oscar," he said, and thereafter it was that kind of thing.

They struck presently into an old road that had been an early highway across the mountains. Above and below the forest hung gloomily, and passing clouds darkened the slopes and occasionally spilled rain. Armitage drew on his cloak, and Oscar enveloped himself in a slicker as they rode through a sharp shower. At a lower level they came into fair weather again and, crossing a bridge, rode down into Storm valley. The road at once bore marks of care, and they passed a number of traps that spoke unmistakably of cities and riders whose mounts knew well the brittle paths of Central park. The hotel looked majestically before them and beyond were handsome estates and ambitious mansions scattered through the valley and on the lower slopes.

Armitage paused in a clump of trees and dismounted.

"You will stay here until I come back. And remember that we don't know any one, and at our time of life, Oscar, one should be wary of making new acquaintances."

He tossed his cloak over the saddle and walked toward the inn. The size of the place and the great number of people going and coming surprised him, but in the numbers he saw his own security, and he walked boldly up the steps of the main hotel entrance. He stepped into the long corridor of the inn, where many people lounged about, and heard with keen satisfaction and relief the click of a telephone instrument that seemed at the moment to bring him into contact with the remote world. He flicked his telegram and walked the length of the broad hall, his riding crop under his arm. The gay banter and laughter of a group of young men and women just returned from a drive gave him a touch of heartache, for there was a girl somewhere in the valley whom he had followed across the sea, and these people were of her own world; they undoubtedly knew her; very likely she came often to this huge caravansary and mingled with them.

At the entrance he passed Baron von Marhof, the Austrian ambassador, who, by reason of the death of his royal chief, had taken a cottage at the Springs to emphasize his abatement of the world of the dead. The ambassador lifted his eyes and bowed to Armitage, as he bowed to a great many young men whose names he never remembered; but, oddly enough, the baron paused, stared after Armitage for a moment, then shook his head and walked on with knit brows.

Armitage had lifted his hat and passed out, tapping his leg with his crop. He walked toward the private houses that lay scattered over the valley and along the gradual slope of the hills as though carelessly flung from a dice box. Many of the places were handsome estates, with imposing houses set amid beautiful gardens. Half a mile from the hotel he stopped a passing negro to ask who owned a large house that stood well back from the road. The man answered. He seemed anxious to impart further information, and Armitage availed himself of the opportunity.

"How near is Judge Claiborne's place?" he asked.

The man pointed. It was the next house on the right-hand side, and Armitage smiled to himself and strode on.

He looked down in a moment upon a pretty estate, distinguished by its formal garden, but with the broad acres of a practical farm stretching far out into the valley. The lawn terraces were green, broken only by plots of spring flowers. The walks were walked in box and privet. The house, of the pillared colonial type, crowned a series of terraces. A long pergola, with pillars topped by red urns, curved gradually through the garden toward the mansion. Armitage followed a side road along the brick partition wall and contemplated the inner landscape. The sharp snap of a gardener's shears far up the slope was the only sound that reached him. It was a charming place, and he yielded
