THE BAPTISTS CONDEMN THE "GO" PREACHERS

The N. B. Association of United Baptists Took Stand Against Them Yesterday at Meeting in Hartland.

Special to The Standard: Hartland, N. B., July 11.—About fifty-seven ministers, besides several lay delegates, gathered in the ministers' conference this afternoon.

After the opening exercises, Rev. James McLackie of Hampton Station read a paper on "The Pastor's Intellectual and Spiritual Qualifications for his Work."

Rev. Wellington Camp of St. John then read a deeply interesting paper on "The Pastor, His Pastoral Work."

This also was freely discussed, but perhaps that which called out the widest expression of opinion was the last paper by Rev. H. H. Saunders of Sussex on "The Pastor's Cooperation with Denominational Interests."

He said there were certain laws in the natural, physical and spiritual realm which, being obeyed, bring happiness and blessing.

Belief in Him solves the problems of the world. He is the solution of them all. The power for this is the Holy Spirit which He gives to man.

Rev. Mr. Robinson's Case. The ministers' conference recommended that as the preaching service, a committee was appointed to take into consideration a communication received from the Misses Among visitors to the association are Rev. M. L. Gregg of Leaconia, N. B., Rev. C. T. Clarke of Newton Theological Seminary, Rev. R. W. Ferguson of Carleton Place, Ontario, Rev. W. R. Robinson having been fully exonerated.

Liberal Clubs And Others Saw That Sir Wilfrid Got Big Reception—Fireworks And Oratory.

Montreal, July 11.—A magnificent ovation was tendered Sir Wilfrid Laurier by his arrival here tonight. The Liberal clubs and the various committees had done their work thoroughly, and from Montrealeville to Montreal both banks of the river were ablaze with light as the government steamer Druid, bearing Sir Wilfrid and his family, passed in the harbor.

The dock at Victoria pier was the climax in the way of illumination. A towering arc of incandescent lights was erected and every where were banners and bunting. Huge streamers bearing mottoes were stretched on high, the inscriptions being "Welcome, Sir Wilfrid." "Long live the premier," etc.

At the dock the premier was met by the civic delegation and citizens. An address was given by Acting Mayor Gavin, to which the premier briefly replied. Then a huge procession was formed and with Sir Wilfrid seated in the center, proceeded to the Champ de Mars.

When Sir Wilfrid received the reply to Mr. Garneau's address he was greeted with roars of applause, which died slowly away as he began. Sir Wilfrid, after thanking his friends for the welcome which they had given him, referred to the "Hybrid alliance" between Conservatives and Nationalists, and admitted that this alliance was a dangerous one to fight.

In touching briefly on the question of reciprocity he declared that there seemed no foundation for the accusations that the manufacturers were at the bottom of the opposition. "The tariff," he declared, "is based on the ill-founded beliefs of British and Canadian imperialistic jingoism."

Referring to his work abroad, he said that he had succeeded in this and that time would show that his work had been of benefit to the interests both of Canada and of the Empire.

Speaking of his experiences abroad, he landed the English monarchy and elected him as the first president of the Place Viger Hotel, where he spent the night before leaving for the capital in the morning.

WRECK WAS THE WORST EVER KNOWN. Continued from Page 1. The townsmen says that when Curtis locomotive whizzed by, steam had been shut off and the brakes were grinding on sand.

MOSQUITOES PREVENTED SWAMP HELPLESS IN JERSEY SWAMP Millions of Insects Torture Aaron Kennedy, Unable to Walk on Sprained Ankle—He Suffered Agony for Three Days and Nights—Berry Pickers Find Him Unconscious.

New York, July 11.—With his features swollen from mosquito bites so that he was not recognizable and almost dead from thirst, hunger and exposure, Aaron Kennedy, 21 years old of Clinton, N. J., was found unconscious in a swamp four miles west of Caldwell, New Jersey, last night.

The young man was all but lifeless when he was found accidentally, by John Briskine and Edward K. Letu, who had gone into the swamp black-berrying and discovered Kennedy lying nearly lifeless in the tall grass. It was not until first he had been taken to the out of the way place, assaulted by robbers, and his appearance bore out this theory.

Kennedy is now in his home, in Clinton, and the physicians in attendance say it will be weeks before he will be fully recovered. It is feared that his mind may be affected by his terrible experience.

When Kennedy left his home in Clinton last Thursday morning he neglected to say where he was going and this added to the mystery of his disappearance. His intention was to go into the swamp and take home a big bagful of berries as a surprise.

The swamp extends over a large area and is covered in places by grass three feet high. According to his story, he had gone into it more than a hundred yards when he was unable to find any berry bushes, and those he discovered had no ripe fruit.

Kennedy then tried to retrace his way through the puddles of stagnant water, but he was unable to do so when he was compelled to sit down because of his pain. With his pocket-knife he cut the laces of the shoes, and he had to take off his shoes before he could free the injured foot.

Paris, July 11.—One result of the triumphant aeroplane flight from the continent to England has been a revival of the project for a tunnel under the Channel. Every time the idea has been put forward hitherto it has been opposed by the military old fogies, who saw in it a sort of danger to England's splendid isolation.

After the invasion of London by the battalion of continental aeroplanes, it is impossible to set up the claim that Great Britain is safe from attack as long as her navy retains command of the sea.

As pointed out a few days ago, what eleven aeroplanes could do is quite within the power of a thousand. Hence even without the tunnel the navy is powerless to prevent an enemy from attacking not only the English coast towns, but London itself.

Consequently the sole valid objection to a tunnel, namely, the military objection, exists no longer, and it is sooner a submarine tunnel is constructed the better for both the English and French commercial worlds.

This suggestion is now warmly welcomed on both sides of the Channel. The Pall Mall Gazette in discussing the subject says the mercantile opinion of both the French and British is stoutly in favor of it.

In a statement issued by Vice-President of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company this evening, the assertion is made that Engineer Curtis disregarded both the distance and the home signals and the confirmation is given of the earlier official statement to the effect that the federal express was running at the crossover at a rate of about 60 miles an hour when the running card called for only 15.

During the day, they became worse at night. They attacked his head and face and hands from all sides and even penetrated his clothing. He fought them with his hands, yet there seemed to be millions of them springing at him out of the darkness.

Drinking himself over the marshy land on his hands, he gathered bits of dry grass and weeds and kindled a fire. The smoke gave relief from the mosquitoes for a while, but his fire soon went out, when his supply of fuel was exhausted, and the ferocious insects again returned to the attack.

For hours he had been longing for a drink, but was afraid to take the brackish water around him. He covered with slime, and he knew, contained the larvae of millions of mosquitoes. Even to taste it, he thought, would invite a deadly fever.

He could see lights, but they were dim, and he was unable to tell from which point of the compass they shone. Again he laid his lips and head with the water from the pool, and it relieved him so much that, despite the mosquitoes, which swarmed about him, he fell asleep.

How long he slept he does not know, but there was a little gray streak in the east when he opened his eyes, first one and then the other, by sheer force. He could not understand what ailed them, but as he looked at his garments he realized the cause.

He was covered with mosquitoes. The flesh of his face, he could tell by feeling, stood out in knobs. His eyelids had swollen from the poisonous bites inflicted on him as he slept.

He tried to move his naked foot, but the pain in his ankle was excruciating still, although his entire body had a sense of numbness. It seemed deadened by the poison of the thousands of bites he had suffered.

It was under these same conditions that Friday passed. He had no matches and no kindling as on the day before, to make a fire and drive his tormentors off, but the feeling of deadness seemed to compensate for that.

The biting probably was as fierce and vicious, but he was so thoroughly inoculated with the poison that he did not seem to know it. He fell asleep again, for how long he did not know.

He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain.

He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain.

He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain. He realized only his hunger and pain.

There are large buildings at Sangatte in charge of a resident engineer and the machinery from the time the work was stopped, 30 years ago, has been kept under constant attention and can be started at any moment, so that should sanction be obtained, a very short time indeed would be required before the work could be begun again.
