

College Dictionary.

A DVERTISEM^ENT. A notice; a most profitable way of acquiring world-wide fame (we hope) if inserted in Sesame.

BLUES.—A so-called inexplicable state where the atmospheric pressure of multitudinous tribulations weighs as an insupportable burden upon the mental processes of its innocent possessor.

BROKE.—The state of most of us a week before Christmas.

CHOICE AND CHANCE.—A part of algebra in which you take your chance of getting through, or if you don't you have a choice of taking it over again in the fall.

CRAM.—Something that rhymes with jam, but does not mean at all the same thing. If, however, the first letter is eliminated the remaining word is almost synonymous.

EXAMINATIONS.—That part of the College course devoted to the education of the faculty.

FLUSH.—The state of our pocket-books just after we have received a letter from home.

GRADUATION.—The realization of the hopes of four years, and the wish for four more.

HOME.—The place that seems most distant from this section of the country to one who has experienced College life but for a limited time.

LUCK.—What puts you through an exam.
