OUR WEDDING TRIP.

Quite a time has elapsed since I wrote the last letter under the above heading, and doubtless you will think we have settled in the Ashuelot Valley, where you last heard from us. Let us assure you such is not the case, though we spent some very pleasant days there. The time was principally taken up by being driven by our friends to see the different things of interest in Hinsdale and vicinity. Among them one might mention the Northfield schools of the late D. L. Moody. What a wonderfully useful life he led, and though he has gone to his reward, the work still continues! For one of our outings we crossed the old Connecticut in a boat, that for its motive power uses the passing water of the river. This is the way it is arranged; they have a large wire cable overhead, stretched from bank to bank, to which they attach two pulleys from either end of the boat; then by dropping down a sideboard on the side of the boat, against the water strikes, and shortening the forward pulley, away you go in good shape.

While at Hinsdale we visited some large farms, whose chief product was corn and tobacco; the latter was in the drying state. It was hung up in large buildings that were boarded perpendicularly, every other board being hung on hinges, and on fine days turned back on the board to which it was attached, to admit the air.

Whenever I had leisure, I would take a gun and go off on the hills around the walnut and chestnut groves, among which are to be found the silver grey squirrel, which is, when full grown, about the size of a half grown cat. The way to hunt them, or rather to "wait" for them, is to select a location from which you can see for a distance around you; if there are any about, you will soon hear them hustling around among the leaves for the nuts, and should you make the slightest noise in your position, they will spring like the old time Indian behind the first tree. However, I succeeded in getting a number of their pretty furs to bring home.

Leaving Hinsdale, we returned to Amesbury, and spent two or three more days with our friends there, who drove us to all the interesting objects to be seen in that locality. Among them I might mention an old church in Amesbury that is still in use, that is nearly 200 years old; also drove by where the "Captain's Well," spoken of by Whittier, is; also visited Cherry Hill, the specialty being ornamental trees and shrubs, and could not but admire the beautiful evergreen hedges. But to me, the most pleasant event of the whole trip was a sail down the Merrimack River, and away outside of Plum Island, after wild fowl, duck and gull. I will not say what success we had, as "Uncle Sam" rather objects to have them exterminated for the ladies' benefit; but I will say, that shortly after that trip, there were no less than 3 ladies who had their hats trimmed in the most approved fashion. With regret we left this very pleasant place and went back to Boston, took the steamer for Yarmouth, came up to Berwick, where we spent two or three very pleasant days. Leaving there, we returned home.
